

Local Happenings

J. A. Troedson of Morgan, his uncle, Johannes Troedson of Ione and Paul Troedson of Gladstone, were visitors here on Friday, looking after matters of business. Paul has been residing at Gladstone for the past four years, where he has a small farm of five acres amid pleasant surroundings, but notwithstanding, he still has a longing for Morrow county and his many old friends here and says this part of Oregon looks mighty good to him. Mr. Troedson was one of the pioneers of the Morgan section, where he spent many years in overcoming the difficulties met in subduing the virgin soil, and success crowned his patient efforts.

Frank Lieualten recently returned from a visit to Umatilla county and a portion of the Washington country in Adams county. He reports that the farmers of Umatilla are putting in a big lot of grain this fall, practically all of their summer-fallow now being seeded. In the Washington section the work was not so well advanced, and many farmers there appear discouraged and will not seed their ranches, desiring to let their land out on leases.

John Woodard, for many years a resident of Morrow county but now living near Hermiston, was in the city on Monday to attend the funeral of his son, Jack Woodard, late of Weiser, Idaho. Mr. Woodard remained over for a few days to have a visit with his many old-time friends at Heppner. He was accompanied by his son, Chauncey Woodard, who is also a resident of the Hermiston section.

J. H. Howard of Colfax, Mrs. Edith Stephenson and Mrs. Ollie Crawford of Spokane and Mrs. Flora Kincaid of Pullman, Wash., arrived at Heppner on Sunday for a visit of a week at the home of their father, Henry Howard. Mrs. Stephenson was formerly a resident of Heppner, her husband, Frank Stephenson being a miller in the flouring mills at this place for a number of years.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Carter were visitors in the city Monday from their farm in the foothills southeast of Heppner. Mr. Carter has been able to do a lot of work during the summer and fall and now has his place all fenced and a new residence well on the road to completion, besides making a lot of posts for his neighbors. His health is quite fully restored.

Albert Miller, who is with the Standard Oil company at Walla Walla, arrived at Heppner Sunday to spend a portion of his vacation here. He was accompanied by his sister, Miss Thelma Miller, who had been on a short visit to Walla Walla. Before he returns to his work, Mr. Miller expects to spend a short time with his brothers at Robnett, Oregon.

Otto Lindstrom, who is a successful farmer residing near Morgan, was in Heppner Tuesday. He has finished with the fall work and says that grain is just coming along the finest ever. The weather conditions have been ideal, though some of the people in that vicinity were compelled to do a little reseeded because of the big blow a few weeks ago.

E. S. Miller, who runs the Jackson farm southeast of Lexington, was a visitor in Heppner on Saturday. His office is pleased to acknowledge a substantial call from Mr. Miller. He states that the fall work is about completed in his vicinity and much of the grain is up and growing well, getting a mighty fine start for the winter.

Proper Housing Means More Profits In Hog Raising The Hog needs protection more than most domestic animals, because it lacks natural protection, and is very susceptible to the influence of cold, heat and drafts. Hog houses should have tight walls, roofs, doors and windows, abundant sunlight, well drained floors and plenty of fresh air without drafts. They should be strongly built of good materials. Frame construction meets all these requirements and TUM-A-LUM Lumber is recommended because it is carefully and accurately made, is strong, durable, dependable and will give life-long honest service. Picture of Hog house shown here is only one of many properly designed styles that our architectural department has worked out. Our detail blue prints and material lists are so complete that building can be done by yourself. These are furnished free with the material. Drop in our office and let us show you other styles. CHAPTER VI THE DRINK OF ETERNITY Mallinson was in a rage. Sharkey had rushed breathlessly into his home and informed him of the near tragedy of Ruth, Eugene and Eugene Craig in the demolished shack. In fact, so angry was Henry Mallinson that Sharkey couldn't figure out whether he was raging because the two young people had not been killed, or because of the rashness of the act itself. "My whole scheme for getting control of Haunted Valley has been endangered by your stupidity," Mallinson roared. "I hired you so that I could work under cover. Yet you were at the dam with the two foremen who were arrested, and tonight you have come here. If you were followed, the trail would lead directly to my door." Mallinson immediately called Ruth on the phone and learned that there were no serious injuries. In fact, both Ruth and Craig had escaped unscathed. As Vivian Delamar was at Ruth's, Mallinson requested that she come immediately to his home. "Mr. Mallinson requests that I stop in on my way home," Vivian said, turning to Ruth. "Then let Mr. Craig drop you here," Ruth answered. "Wait a moment while I get my wraps and I'll go along." As Ruth ran upstairs, Vivian saw her opportunity. "It would be so romantic if Ruth would fail to repay the million," she said to Craig. "Why, what do you mean?" the young man answered. "If she fails, she not only forfeits Haunted Valley, but she marries Mr. Mallinson," Vivian smiled. "She was extremely pleased to see the effect on Craig, and added, "Oh, forgive me. I thought you knew. Please don't let anyone know I told you." Vivian was not going to let Mallinson slip through her fingers if she could help it. As Craig was still pondering over the news and all it meant to him, Ruth tripped daintily down the stairs dressed for the ride, and all three left the house together. Meanwhile, the dispute between Henry Mallinson and Sharkey was becoming extremely heated. "Look here, Sharkey," Mallinson, had resorted to desperate and murderous methods to gain his ends. "Mallinson became livid. "Dirks tried to threaten me," he said, "and Dirks is dead. Denslow used the same tactics, and for your information I'll tell you that Denslow will never be seen again. Just look out!" Sharkey saw that it was best to keep his temper. He picked his cap off of Mallinson's desk and walked sullenly from the room. A moment later, Craig with Ruth Ranger and Vivian Delamar drove up to Mallinson's house. As Craig stopped the car, and Vivian departed, he noticed a man walking down the sidewalk that led from the house. Then, as the man stepped into a roadster, an ejaculation of surprise passed Craig's lips. "Great Scott, Ruth!" Craig exclaimed. "That's him—that's the fellow behind that plot with the freight car." And as Sharkey hastily drove from the curb, Craig started his own machine in swift pursuit. Craig and Ruth had an exciting chase on their hands trying to catch the fleeing Sharkey. Around corners they went, up side streets, and finally into an alleyway. Sharkey leaped from his car and rushed for a stone wall directly in front of him. But Craig darted after him, seized him and dragged him to the ground before he could get over. "You were responsible for the accident at the dam, and you are in touch with Mallinson," Craig accused. "Now if you've got anything to say, speak up!" Sharkey suddenly realized that only the truth could save him. "Mallinson is determined to have Haunted Valley at any cost," he answered. "But what has Mallinson to gain?" asked Ruth, amazed. "It is true that I have discovered water in the valley, but to irrigate the land would take months; and even then the val-
