His mother-in-law fell heir to a note for $3,000 given by a teaming company. She traded the note to Hodges. Making his way to Los Angeles he forced the company to give him sixteen mules and four wagons. But what was he to do with sixteen hungry mules?

Riding one of them and leading the other fifteen he found a gravel bed on a Los Angeles river, where he could get gravel free. On his nerve alone he hired three negro drivers and with them began hauling gravel into Los Angeles at $2.50 a load. At the end of two years he had not made a cent-To make money he must find a shorter haul. He found a bed of gravel four miles nearer Los Angeles. Demand for gravel at $2.50 a load was great, but at the end of a year he was $13,000 in debt.

In a department store, where he had gone to buy overalls, he saw an escalator. Hurrying to a junk dealer he obtained an assortment of old machinery and rubber beilting, and in a week had erected a long, heavy movable belt running from his crushing platform down into the ravine. Into the ravine. One man could thus load more rock onto this belt and have it dumped at the crusher than fourteen could handle before. His business began to show a slight profit. At night he studded in the Les Argeles Y. M. C. A., walking twelve miles each day to do so. But seven mouths later, he found himself $35,000 in debt.

One Monday a note for $10,000 fell due. He went to the bank and asked to see the president. "I'm through," said Hodges. "How much do you need?" asked the banker. He loaned him $15,000 more.

Then the tide set his way. In 12 months he paid the bank. Then fire whed him out, causing a $70,000 loss. But from insurance money he built a better plant. Six months later a flood swept down and buried his new plant under sand. His loss was $80,000. He built a new plant and sold the sand.

In the accounts sent out from Salem regarding the savings effected by the law, the statement is made that the state has been saved a million dollars and the amounts are given by counties.

If these amounts are anything like the amounts given for Benton county, the savings more apparent than real. In this county, for instance, all the "savings" are in school districtievies. Most of them were mere cierical errors.
