THE McNARY-HAUGEN BILL.

BECAUSE of the poor market for wheat the past few years, our farmers have been hard hit, and it is only to be expected that they should grab at any straw which holds out a ray of hope for bettering their condition. For some time there has been discussion of the advisability of government aid, or whether it would be practicable. It now seems that there has been a plan devised which holds forth promise, and Oregon farmers are going for it strong. The plan has been drawn up in the form of a bill and is being sponsored by Senator McNary of Oregon and Representative Haugen of Iowa.

The bill, entitled "The Agricultural Export Commission Act," was so favorably received by Oregon farmers that a meeting was called at Pendleton last Saturday with a view to organising a state league to further its promotion. A temporary organization of the Oregon Export Commission League was formed at that meeting which is to be followed by the organization of county leagues. Morrow county has entered the swing, and will organize at Lexington, February 9.

An excerpt taken from an editorial in Monday's Pendleton East Oregonian, regarding the working of the plan is as follows:

"Ever since the sharp fall in the price of wheat that followed the post war boom days farmers have been wondering when an adjustment would be effected that would give them a profit on their farming operations. At first it was assumed that the problem would work itself out in a satisfactory solution through the laws of trade, but the passing of several years has left the problem as big as ever, and cash and credit reserves have been sadly depleted. Such a condition of affairs can not continue indefinitely.

"Many suggestions have been put forward to effect a cure. Some of the plans have been class legislation pure and simple and have met with as little favor from farmers as from the rest of the country. At the meeting here Saturday afternoon of the wheat growers and business men representing the state of Oregon consideration was given to the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill now in committee in congress.

"The bill was discussed by several able speakers who have spent considerable time in a study of its provisions. A division of opinion exists as to its changes of passage by congress and just how successful it will be if it is passed. It was noticeable, however, that the attitude of those who expressed themselves was that they prefer trying the plan and taking a chance on its success rather than following the present system and facing its apparently inevitable result—failure and bankruptcy.

"The working of the plan, as it is now drawn, is described in part as follows by the American Wheat Growers Associated:

"Assume it has been found necessary to establish pre-war purchasing power, to raise wheat prices generally 29 to 25 cents a bushel. A tax of 7 cents a bushel would be assessed against all marketed wheat. The fund thus created would enable the payment of a premium of approximately 30 cents a bushel on that portion of the crop sold for export, thereby raising the export price and resulting in a like raise in the domestic price for all wheat. Result, wheat farmers have paid a tax of 7 cents a bushel and have received a price increased by 30 cents a bushel, securing a net benefit of 23 cents a bushel.

"The government will be asked to provide the machinery to operate the plan, but every cent of expense will be met by the tax paid by growers of marketed wheat at so many cents a bushel, so any complaint that farmers are seeking to enrich themselves out of the public treasury need not be given any consideration."

SUGGESTS STATE POLICE.

OREGON communities are being torn with clashes between law enforcing bodies. Local police, state prohibition agents and Federal "dry" agents are obviously working at cross purposes. Former bootleggers are now deputized as state agents. That a man's home is still his castle has again been laboriously affirmed in Portland, but that reassurance was not without some comedy, some disconcerting evidence that the state agents are operating without much control and with less purpose and principle, and some misgivings about the multiplicity of law enforcing efforts within the state.

These conditions led the Albany Democrat recently to suggest that a "centralized state police" force be established. The Albany paper makes a dandy argument for its idea. We would like to quote the whole editorial, but it is too long. The point that the Democrat makes, and it's a wise precaution in an attempt to actually create favorable opinion for the scheme, is that a state police system would not necessarily mean a great increase in the number of men employed. Coordination and cooperation of the existing forces, both state and local, under a responsible directing head, is the germ of the plan.

The paragraphs below are a portion of the editorial:

"Oregon's present law enforcing difficulties undoubtedly originate not so much from the inefficiency or incapacity of state law enforcement officers as from the loose organization by means of which administration of the enforcement program is carried out. There is too little cooperation and too much friction between departments or division which at times, when complicated situations arise, are actually placed in opposing positions.

"The time is ripe now for a reorganization of the state law enforcement phase of Oregon's government along lines that will iron out the rough places and coordinate police agencies so that all may work smoothly and more efficiently together.

"Pennsylvania's state constabulary might well afford a model for this reorganization, while valuable suggestions might be derived from a study of the Canadian police system. Both appear to have worked well and toward a minimum of crime and misdemeanors.

"At present law enforcement duties in counties are assigned to sheriffs who have a great deal to do besides exploring basements and smelling people's breaths. These men are elected by the people, and are not chosen because of their peculiar adaptability as enforcement officers. In fact, an excellent sheriff might be a poor detective, and a phenomenal detective might be a poor sheriff, for the duties of the sheriff are many and varied. Similarly sheriff's deputies, selected from the rank and file of county citizenry, while adequate to handle the ordinary run of cases, are not equipped to cope with the extraordinary and cannot be expected so to be. They are not trained professional law enforcement officers.

"Sheriffs, and even police chiefs, should have available a store of talent from which to draw in emergencies such as arise nearly every day in Oregon, and such as require the services of a group of men who in necessary quality and number could not be supported each group by a single county unassisted.

"If the state should maintain such a force one great difficulty that now confronts sheriffs and police chiefs would be greatly reduced. Under the present system, while state men are available, their methods are so varied and unsystematic that, as a rule, county and city enforcement officers prefer to get along without their aid."—Oregon Voter.

A thoroughly good time was had by all who attended the High School smoker at the Fair pavilion Tuesday evening. The matches put on by the school were well arranged, and everything went off with "snap and ginger." The pop corn balls and candy sold by the girls were much appreciated and netted a neat sum for the treasury. Over 300 people showed their interest in the white hope "pugs" and mat men of Heppner by turning out and cheering wildly. We would answer the question put by the student body president, of what the audience thought of the show by: Sure, let's have some more!

The meeting at Lexington on February 9 is in the interest of the wheat men. You will profit by being there, Mr. Wheat Man.

Did the young people of Heppner ever think of organizing a hiking club. In some places hiking is made a great sport. It has many recreational advantages.

WHITE MEN ALL.

(Editor's Note: A few weeks ago it was our privilege to publish a letter from Sterling E. Price, marine radio operator, to his grandfather, E. Nordyke, of Lexington, in which he described the wreck of a Japanese freighter. Mr. Nordyke received from his grandson the following poem regarding the wreck written by the first assistant engineer of the Tug Mumaconna, the tug on which Mr. Price was serving, and which we publish through the courtesy of Mr. Nordyke.)

'Twas only a Japanese freighter,
A tramp so they said to me;
Broken down and drifting
Far out on the open sea.

A shout went up from all quarters
When the tug took them in tow,
And they felt they were out of danger
Should any gale chance to blow.

They were towing to shelter and safety,
But ere reaching their journey's end
They had to cross for some distance
The open sea again.

Here the gale struck them fiercely
And the thought came home to them
That their only hope from a cruel death
Lay in God, the tug and its men.

The tug turned about to seek shelter
And its crew as a single mind
Only thought to save the little brown men
On the burden dragging behind.

And there in the dark and blackness
As they felt the sea's awful shocks,
The crew of the tug fought with madness
To keep the brown men from the rocks.

But the crew of the Japanese freighter
Watched the tug struggle faithfully on,
And cried out these words to their master,
"Oh Captain! The tug's going down!"

"Slip the cable!" he shouted, "and free them,
Perhaps they can battle it through,
If not we may all go under,
'Tis a chance to save a few."

You've heard it said of men, no doubt,
"There's a white man through and through."
But there are little brown men among us,
Who though brown, are white men too.

DR. CHICK IN THE DALLES.

C. C. Chick, physician and surgeon, recently moved to The Dalles from Heppner where he has practiced during the past five years, with a record of twenty years service in Morrow county. Dr. Chick, who established himself on the fourth floor of the First National Bank building last week and will share a reception room with Dr. Ingram, states that he has always liked The Dalles and for some time has contemplated settling here. He said that he considers The Dalles a beautiful little town, well and favorably located, and with indications of a very promising future. Dr. Chick will be assisted in his work by Miss Blanche Bristow, a graduate nurse, of Vancouver, B. C., who was connected with his office during his five year stay in Heppner.—The Dalles Optimist.

WHERE IS JOE KULA?

Sheriff Elmer Montague has received a letter from Miss Elizabeth Kula, Route 1, Harrisburg, Oregon, inquiring about her brother Joe Kula who was last heard from at Condon in November. He worked for John J. Kelly, Heppner sheepman, and left that place with a man named Edwards or Edmonds, to come here. The boy is seventeen years of age, has blue eyes, brown hair, and "medium" complexion, according to his sister's description. He liked "buckarooing" and may be on some Eastern Oregon cattle ranch. He spent his money freely for riding togs. He had about $50 when he left Heppner.—Condon Globe-Times.

Oscar Keithley was here from Eight Mile on Saturday and took part in the deliberations of the executive committee of the Farm Bureau at the office of County Agent Morse that afternoon.

One more week nearer Spring. Are we getting ready for action?
