PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S LABOR DAY ADDRESS.

LABOR DAY ADDRESS. President Coolidge's Labor Day speech was one of the most notable utterances of the year. It was not an appeal to class consciousness. It did not seek to array labor against capital.

Labor has no more dangerous enemy than the politician who preaches the demagogic doctrine that the way to promote the welfare of the worker is to strike at productive industry and therefore at employment.

As President Coolidge points out the theory of American government does not contemplate class domination in any form. We do not want in the United States a farm government, a labor government, a manufacturers' government or a merchants' government.

The status of the American worker is the envy of the world. This is not a theory, but a condition, easily demonstrated by the statistics which set forth the actual and relative remuneration of the American wage earner.

President Coolidge points out the relationship of the Republican policy of protection to our incomparably higher standard of wages and living. This American standard cannot be maintained in the face of unregulated influx into the United States either of labor accustomed to lower standards of life, or the product of this labor brought into direct competition with the output of the American farm and mill.

We need protection, too, as President Coolidge says, against the importation of European political and economic ideas, the product of political and economic conditions differing greatly from our own.

In this, as in all his other utterances, President Coolidge points out the essential unity of interest among all Americans. As President McKinley so often said: "In this country, we all go up or down together."

INTEREST grows in the proposed amendment to the Oregon workmen's compensation law, to be voted in November. It gives the commission power to specify what industries must come under the present workmen's compensation law, gives it power to fix all premium rates for employers and employees, power to make all rules and regulations for the administration of the law.

POWER ABOVE THE LEGISLATURE. A mixture of one part bull and three parts bunk is effective in many cases. The Progressive platform has been suggested as an ideal blend of bull and bunk—Agricultural Review.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BULL AND BUNK.

CHARLIE COLLINS, of Kit Carson, Colo., cow man, banker, farmer and political economist, in a letter to the Agricultural Review, expresses the opinion that there is too much bull in the current platforms of both the major political parties, particularly with regard to agriculture.

Being stopped from engaging in political controversies in these columns, by reason of the fact that the Review is owned by several thousand Republican farmers, and about as many Democratic farmers, we are restricted to a discussion of the meaning of the two terms employed in designating those planks.

Bull and bunk are not the same commodity. Bull is in common use for the purpose of flattering people, with a view to a lead-string. Few of us but have felt its gentle and seductive tug. Bull is modernized blarney.

Bunk, on the other hand, is the art of making things appear in a different light than the true one. It is the truth is not a necessary ingredient of bunk, and is frequently dispensed with entirely by dealers in the latter. To charge a political opponent, either an individual or a party, with responsibility which does not fairly attach, is bunk. To promise a visionary or impossible remedy for an existing ill is bunk.

A mixture of one part bull and three parts bunk is effective in many cases. The Progressive platform has been suggested as an ideal blend of bull and bunk—Agricultural Review.

LIVE STOCK EXPOSITION Premium List Is Out

The premium list for the fourteenth annual Pacific International Live Stock Exposition is now in the mail. It is an interesting book, and indicates that that great institution is living up to its motto—"Bigger and Better."

In the beef cattle division, the classifications show few changes. The Exposition offers $2,500 to each exhibitor. It is an interesting book, and indicates that that great institution is living up to its motto—"Bigger and Better."

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER, candidate for Vice President on the La Follette-Socialist ticket declared in a Labor day speech that both the Democratic and Republican parties "long since ceased to represent distinct lines of economic thought and interest."

THE OUTLOOK for exhibits at the Pacific International Live Stock Exposition at Portland, Ore., is extremely good this year. A number of famous herds from the East and Middle West are coming, without fail, and others signify their intention of showing at the great Pacific slope event.
