Children's Diseases.

State Board of Health. What is a "children's disease"? Plainly, one which is so catching and so widely distributed, that most of us get it before we are very old. Among the most contagious of these diseases are measles and chickenpox, which very few of us escape, and which most of us get either before we go to school or soon after we start. Other diseases, like scarlet fever, whooping-cough or diphtheria, are most common among children. We often escape the latter, however. They are not quite so catching, and as we grow older we are apt to develop resistance to them so that we often keep from having them altogether.

We never become resistant to the first two—if we never happen to have had them in childhood, we are almost sure to get them the first time we are exposed, no matter how old we are. Many of the men who went to army camps at the beginning of the war came from small, isolated communities, like the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee. These men had never been exposed to some of these diseases, because never in their lives had they come in contact with very many people. As a result, outbreaks of "children's diseases" were one of the first things that happened when camps were established. During these outbreaks usually everybody who had never had the diseases came down with them. The policemen of Edinburgh, Scotland, are recruited largely from small Highland villages. There usually are one or two recruits in the hospital in Edinburgh with measles or chickenpox.

Just because most of us must get these diseases is no reason for being them. Measles and whooping cough, for instance, are very fatal in young children and infants. The longer we can protect our family from them, the less dangerous they will be. If we can protect them long enough, they may never get some of the contagious diseases.

Smallpox used to be a "children's disease"; everybody looked forward, with a minimum of pleasure, to the time when they or their families must go through it. It was so certain, that children were exposed to mild cases or inoculated with smallpox itself so as to get as mild as possible an attack. With the present neglect of vaccination, smallpox is again in a fair way to become a "children's disease". Unvaccinated children are in considerable danger. Recently, four cases have been reported from an Oregon orphanage. It is merely a question of whether to vaccinate the children first and avoid all smallpox, or to wait until some of them get the disease and then vaccinate the rest.
