Practicing What We Preach.

THE Grants Pass chamber of commerce carries the following slogan on their letterhead: Buy Home Products—Keep Your Money at Home. You Never Get Another Chance at a Dollar Sent Away.

This is a slogan that every commercial club, every town and every individual should not only "adopt" but practice. If clubs, towns and individuals practiced what many of them preach, if they "lived" up to that slogan instead of giving it mere lip service, there would be no demand for Portland bread here, no invasion by outside laundry wagons, no patronage for the transient, fly-by-night solicitors and peddlers, no clients for foreign attorneys, no patients for distant hospitals and physicians, no conquests by high powered automobile salesmen, no falling for penny-ante fake advertising schemes of good-looking female solicitors, no investments in unknown uninvestigated enterprises of doubtful character, no yearly flood of town-destroying mail order catalogues, no weekly deluge of postal money orders for Rears & Sobuck, no turning down of our railroad that maintains its $3,500,000 line, paying nearly one fourth of our taxes and giving our freight to truck lines that may be in business one day and out the next and pay not a cent of taxes in the county.

If all who preach that Grants Pass slogan (read it again) actually practiced it, our home baker could serve us well, our laundry could equal the best work, our merchants offer the best goods at the lowest prices, our home physicians serve us at a first-class hospital, our automobile dealers get us any make of machine we desire, our newspaper serve us more efficiently with news, advertising and commercial printing service, our bank could supply every banking and investment service the community needs, our town and county would soon feel the stimulus of the added circulation of many thousands of dollars in the channels of home trade, our vitally necessary railroad service would not be jeopardized, and every business, every business man, every professional man, every farmer, every individual would be benefitted.

"The Strength of Ten."

AMONG the great names of a time, deeply etched in the mind and spirit of this country that of the Commoner is not last nor least. Spite of all disagreements, which, truth to tell, not often verged on enmity, the opponents of this American concede his power with no grudging tongue. He was and is a moral force in the republic he loved and served, and it is very clear that the history of these times is not complete without the record of William Jennings Bryan, modern knight errant who neglected no tournament, nor any hazard, in which he might champion the right as he conceived it.

Statesman with more than a trace of the evangelist, but ever the patriot and the moralist, his was a nature both essentially valiant and essentially vulnerable. That he was wounded to the quick, time and again, none can doubt. His disappointments were many. His rewards, as originally he described them, were never to be attained. Yet he remained, curiously enough, the most invincible of all recent national figures, save Theodore Roosevelt. With him, as with the ardent and impetuous Colonel it was ever one fight more—and the last the best of all. In the gentleness of providence he died comforted by the thought that he had maintained a position and a principle very near and dear to his heart and his faith.

No, the history of his period could not be written without the name of Bryan. How many have been those aspirants to service and to high office who, once overthrown in the melee of politics, have risen to bind their wounds in obscurity. The Commoner was never one to confess defeat, and the tireless courage with which he returned to the field, thereon to declare himself, and to defend his declarations, matched well the almost inspired oratory of his pronouncements. There formed in the American mind the concept of a gallant figure, pathetic in its disappointments, but mighty in spiritual achievement and invincibility—and this was the public's Bryan. More, it approximated a true picture. Men loved him for his fearlessness as for his fervor and because they could not question his sincerity. He had few enemies, as the term applies, but never a one of them dared underestimate the candor and courage of this man.

The living force that was Bryan is now a memory—yet who shall say that the spiritual impetus is spent? There are generations yet unborn that shall read of him, in the book of great Americans, and draw from the record of his life at least a trace of the sincere and constant flame that burned within his heart.

Pierce Needs Defense.

IT IS being openly charged and not denied that Oregon has as governor a man whose word is not good. That accusation is serious. It follows that if Walter Pierce is a liar in one thing, he is a liar in others, and is not the kind of a man who should be the chief executive of the state.

The charge is made relative to the discharge of A. E. Burghdoff as state game warden. Senator Hare of Washington county, noted as a man whose word is as good as his bond, says that in a conference between Governor Pierce and members of the state senate during the last session of the legislature Pierce faithfully promised not to have Burghdoff discharged. It is claimed that at the first opportunity the governor broke his solemn promise.

If this charge is verified, and particularly if it is admitted, we do not believe that Pierce should again be seriously considered as a candidate for re-election. Candidly we say that if the charge is verified the Banner-Courier will not support Pierce for this or any other office, believing that if guilty he has proven himself unworthy of any office within the gift of the people.

A proven liar as governor of a state cannot but bring about a lowering of the morale of the people, having a particularly bad effect upon all young people inclined to public life. If Pierce is guilty of the offense he must and should be punished. He knew when he gave the promise all about Burghdoff, both as to qualifications and political affiliations, was familiar with the consequences, political and otherwise, of living up to such a promise. There can be no excuse if it is proven that the governor broke his word.

Advantages of Small Newspapers.

FROM an ethical standpoint it can fairly be claimed that the country press and small city dailies have a marked advantage over the big metropolitan newspapers. The smaller papers are conducted by their owners who are personally known to the people and business men of the community and read in nearly every family. The owners, editors and publishers are freer to express their honest convictions than the highly commercialized city press, too often run by hired employees, principally to earn dividends.

The small daily or country weekly that lives up to its opportunities represents the stand of personal journalism in behalf of the community. As long as the small city dailies and country weeklies remain true to their best traditions, with their editorials devoted to constructive policies, their influence in journalism will increase.

ballads, and thousands of story, verse and song writers supply the world with this material that is read by millions.

Two years ago Col. E. Hofer of Salem, Oregon, a life-long newspaper man and publisher, established a western literary monthly, The Lariat, to encourage Western writers, set higher standards and fight degenerate products. In its third year, it is followed by The Lariat Story Magazine, published by Real Adventures Publishing Co., of New York, and the North-West Writers Bureau at Salem, Oregon, making a market for literary products of the open air and adventure stories in popular magazines.

While thrilling with the romance of a new and robust civilization, western writers as a class turn out a clean, vital, wholesome literature singularly free from all taint of degeneracy.
