PROVES THAT WOMEN ARE BRAVE
Mathede Schonberg, Who Was Taken Prisoner by Chinese Bandits, Faced Death to Save Others.

Mathede Schonberg, maid of Miss Lucy Aldrich, was taken captive by Chinese bandits. The band of bandits, when pursued by soldiers, placed their captives in front to receive the fire. It became evident that whatever happened to the bandits, no captive would escape alive. It was essential that the fire of the soldiers should be stopped if any captive was to be saved.

The only way was to send one of the captives as a messenger to the soldiers. One of the men volunteered to go. Presumably, any man would go, but some men are more competent than others in the face of danger. But Miss Schonberg insisted that a woman should go, as the soldiers would be less likely to fire other than on a man. That the danger was real is shown by the fact that one of the bandits who escorted her was shot dead. Facing the deadly fire, she passed through safely and accomplished her mission.

It is already proposed that Miss Schonberg receive the Carnegie medal for heroic conduct, and it may be assumed that she will get it. She will certainly be exalted in the souls of those whose lives she saved and their families.

Woman is naturally timid. She shrinks from facing it, and yet constantly does face what men would never endure. And at every moment of extreme peril which can by no means be escaped, woman invariably faces the peril with a calmness and resolution which few men can achieve.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Leaves Estate to Dog, $10,000 Annuity to Spouse
 Boston.—Of an estate valued at $500,000, an annuity of $10,000 is left to the husband of Mrs. Lucinda E. Shaw, originator of a brand of candy, whose will was filed for probate recently.

Provision is made for the comfort of Mrs. Shaw's pet dog. The household and personal effects and real estate here and in Maine are left to Albert W. Myer, in Mrs. Shaw's employ

The SANDMAN STORY

BUNNIES' GRAY COATS
MRS. BUNNY found it very hard to answer all the questions her children asked—just as all mothers do—and while she often did not know the answer to many of the questions, like a good mother she always tried to tell them something that would satisfy them.

The little bunnies were all dressed in their white coats one winter morning, playing in front of their home in the sun, when their mother said, "This nice warm weather will soon bring the spring, and it will be time to put on your gray coats."
 All the little bunnies stopped their play and, with ears sticking up, they sat down in front of their mother. "Where do our gray coats come from?" they all asked.

"We know that Mr. Winter brings our white ones," said one little bunny, sticking up through the snow. It was Pussy Willow peeping out to see if the spring had come.
 Mrs. Rabbit began to smile. She had thought of an answer. "Pussy Willow brings your gray coats," she said. "Don't you remember that the pussy willow is gray almost like your coats? She will soon be here now and bring your coats with her. I expect she is very busy making them this minute."
 But while Mrs. Bunny had ended her troubles she had just started them for poor Pussy Willow, for no sooner did she show herself in her soft gray coat than all the little bunnies ran and sat down beside her.
 "Where are our coats?" they inquired. "We are tired of these old white ones. We want our gray ones. The snow is almost gone, only little patches left, and Mother said you are the one who brings our gray coats, and now we want them."
 Every day they teased and sat beside poor Pussy Willow, who had no idea what it was all about. She knew nothing about their gray coats, and so she just nodded and nodded, but never a word did she say.
 But one morning the little Bunnies awoke to find their gray coats on their backs, and without waiting for breakfast they ran to Pussy Willow to thank her.
 "We are sorry we teased you so much," they told her, "but you must have seen how much we needed new coats. I expect, though, it was a lot of work to make so many coats, and perhaps we were impatient. So please forgive us, Miss Pussy, and next year we will not tease. But please bring them early."

Miss Pussy only nodded, and off ran the little Bunnies to tell their mother Miss Pussy Willow had promised to bring their gray coats earlier next year.
 Mrs. Rabbit only smiled, for she knew that next year her children would be grown and the coming of the gray coats would be quite forgotten until they appeared. For when children grow up they forget the things that interested them in their childhood days, there are so many things more interesting to think about.

CONVERSATION between the two men at the end of the smoker drifted to the subject of "making good." Thereupon one of them told this tale:
 "Augustus Little, or 'Little Gus,' as we called him, I have known since we were boys splashing about in the same swimming hole. Later we both courted Susan. I remember a conversation that summer when I told Gus it should be a fair field and no favor. Gus said, 'Susan never could care for me.' I wondered how he knew that without asking her, and he murmured that he wasn't 'good enough for Susan.' I told him that no one was 'good enough for Susan,' but that if he wasn't man enough to risk a refusal he certainly didn't deserve her. Susan still speaks of Gus' 'sensitiveness' but she married me."
 "Gus and I started in business as clerks in the United States Shipping company. One day the manager wanted a man to put in charge of the big new Boston branch. Gus, who was a good-looking chap that made fine first impressions, was suggested, and the manager was quite ready to try him out. 'I don't know Boston,' began Gus. 'I'm afraid—' and the manager, who had no time to fool, took someone else.

"But the occasion that put my finger on the weak spot in Augustus Little's makeup was the town dinner for 'our own' heroes of the A. E. F. A French general was coming down from the capital to speak, and the governor's wife, who knew that Gus was the only man among us that had been to college, was all for seating him next this guest of honor at table. When Gus looked scared to death and said that his French accent wasn't a bit good and that he was sure the general wouldn't be interested to talk to him, the governor's wife told him he was probably right—that no one wanted to talk to a man with an 'inferiority complex.'"
 "I've always been interested in Gus Little, and one day when I happened to be introduced to one of these new-fangled mind doctors, I asked him what the governor's wife had meant by 'inferiority complex.' As I doped it out 'inferiority complex' is the habit of going round telling yourself and everyone else what a poor worm you are. Gus was so busy thinking about his unworthiness that he couldn't put any elbow grease into improvements that might have won Susan and success. And the darndest part about it all is that after a while everyone begins to take you at your word."

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS
 "CURFEW"

SO MANY histories have related the fact that the institution of the "curfew"—called from the French couvre-feu, cover-fire—was due to William the Conqueror that to deny this would be almost equivalent to denying history itself. But the fact remains that the curfew was known long before 1066, both in England and on the continent.
 As far back as the time of King Alfred the "cover-fire" bell was rung, not as a precaution against political conspiracies—as William the Conqueror intended it, but merely as a form of fire insurance. The great majority of the houses in England at that time were built without chimneys and the live coals presented a constant peril to the towns at large. Though this menace has passed, the curfew is still sounded in a large number of places throughout England, and during the war, was revived as a warning that all lights should be extinguished. In times of peace, however, its principal function is to warn residents that it is time to go to bed and in some places there are laws that forbid children under a certain age from being abroad after curfew has been rung. The usual "curfew hour" is eight o'clock in the evening, but here and there it is sounded at seven or nine o'clock.

Mother's Cook Book

To take your basket and go to the market is more fun than a movie. The advantage in marketing in person is a greater variety in the bills of fare. There are many foods and vegetables that are forgotten, and one is reminded of them in all their attractiveness when found in the stalls at the market. In many places one may buy a pound of butter made that very morning, a freshly-dressed chicken or a piece of spare-rib right from the farm, which will have some meat left on it.
SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS
PERHAPS some inexperienced housewife may be helped by the recipe for Cranberry Sauce.

 Take six cupfuls of cranberries, three cupfuls of granulated sugar, one-half cupful of water. Wash and pick over the berries and add the sugar and water, but do not stir. After they begin to boil, cook ten minutes closely covered. Remove the scum and when cool they will be jellied, the skins soft and tender.

Cranberry Punch.
 Take one pint of cranberries, one and one-half quarts of water, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, four oranges and two lemons. Cook the cranberries in the water and sugar until tender, strain and cool. When cold add the juice of the fruit and freeze until mushy.

Four-Minute Fruit Cake.
 Take two-thirds of a cupful of soft butter or chicken fat, two and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar, four eggs, one cupful of milk, three and one-half cupfuls of sifted flour, two tablespoonfuls of cocoa, one-half teaspoonful of mace, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one cupful of raisins, one-fourth of a pound of chopped dates, one and one-fourth pounds of currants. Put all the ingredients together into a bowl and beat vigorously with a wooden spoon for five minutes. Bake in loaf pans for 45 minutes.

Gluten Muffins.
 Take two cupfuls of gluten flour, two cupfuls of milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one well-beaten egg; mix the dry ingredients; stir in the beaten egg and milk. Beat thoroughly all together and half-fill buttered gem pans. Bake 20 minutes.

Baked Apples With Figs.
 Wash apples and remove the cores, leaving the blossom end unbroken. In the cavity of each apple place a teaspoonful of chopped figs and fill with sugar or syrup to which the juice of a lemon has been added. Place in a baking dish in a slow oven and bake until the apples are tender, basting occasionally.

Fried Rice.
 Take six cupfuls of cooked rice, one cupful of cold roast pork chopped, two tablespoonfuls of fat, one tablespoonful of salt, and two eggs. Add the salt, fat and onion and let fry a few minutes. Add the rice, mix well and when hot add the eggs whole. Stir and cook until the eggs are set, then serve at once.

Some Fail to Recognize Truth.

Operation Avoided
 Portland, Oreg.—"Dr. Pierce's medicine has been so very beneficial to me that I am glad to give it my recommendation. Doctors said I would have to undergo an operation, but after taking the 'Favorite Prescription' I found that an operation was not necessary. During one expectant period I suffered with inflammation and became so weak and rundown I could not do my work. Doctors again advised an operation, but instead I began taking the 'Favorite Prescription' and it soon put me on my feet. My health returned, I had practically no suffering, and my baby was very healthy. Since that time whenever I have felt badly I have taken the 'Favorite Prescription.' It always makes me well in no time."—Mrs. Isabella McLachlan, 768 Mich. Ave.
