Senator McNary's Good Record

Washington, April 2, (Special.)
Of the entire number of Senators now in office the three who have shown the greatest attention to the interests of their constituents and who have been most consistently in their seats are Senators McNary, Capper and Shephard. Such is the statement of Assistant Secretary Henry M. Rose of the U. S. Senate, who has custody of the roll calls of the Senators and he bases his statements on the records of the roll calls during the terms of the Senators. So far as senator McNary is concerned, his record is almost perfect. The only time he was away from roll calls since he came to the senate was during the time of the death and funeral of his wife some years ago, and later when he was confined to his hotel by the grippe. Official figures tell the story of Senator McNary's devotion to Oregon and the United States. He has not missed a single roll call or been absent from his desk during all the sessions since this congress met in December.

The senatorial snookers at Washington are beginning to raid Calvin Coolidge's Mel(1)on patch.

The appointment of Jefferson Myers as State Treasurer to succeed O. P. Hoff, deceased, is an admirable one and is cheering evidence that Governor Pierce is at last using brains in making official selections.

Possible developments in the campaign for the U. S. Senator from this state include the withdrawal of K. K. Kubli from the race, which is freely predicted around Portland. If that happens and with Eugene Smith in the field as an anti-Klan candidate, the nomination of Geo. Baker seems an easy possibility.

Excavatory in the vicinity of Los Angeles have been digging up human skeletons supposed to be ten to fifteen thousand years old. Skeletons just as old as that have been found in the closets of politicians around Washington and the "digging" has been only fairly started. Most of these skeletons have been preserved in oil.

Since our last review of the political situation in Oregon, another candidate for Congress has appeared in the Portland district, Walter G. Lynn having announced his desire to serve the dear people at Washington. Walter has been a representative of the Union labor interests and was elected to the legislature on the republican ticket from Portland, but was defeated in 1922.

Harry M. Daugherty has resigned the position of U. S. Attorney General at the request of President Coolidge. Mr. Daugherty may not be the best man for that position, and it may be for the best interest of the President and the Republican party that he retire in order that no element of personal interest can be charged in the future attitude of the department of justice, but so far as developments up to this time are in sight, Daugherty is a white-robed angel in comparison to the pack of hounds that have been on his trail.

W. B. Gilbert, Robt. S. Bean and Chas. E. Wolverton, three federal judges, united in handing down a decision at Portland last Monday declaring unconstitutional the compulsory school law enacted by vote of the people of Oregon in 1922. The decision is clear cut and is in line with the expressed opinion of many of the best lawyers of the state before and since the passage of the bill. The Governor has announced his intention to appeal the case to the U. S. Supreme Court. It has been claimed that this law had a strong influence in retarding the growth of Oregon and the decision of the court will be welcomed by a large part of the people of the state.

Bad Convicts Escape

Six of the toughest characters in the Oregon penitentiary made a sensational escape last Friday morning, the most sensational since the escape of Tracy and Merrill on June 9, 1902. They broke a lock from a door leading into the basement, then sawed a bar in one of the windows, crawled thru into the front yard, which is under the eyes of the turnkey, also the bookkeeper and warden's office, mounted the steps to the guard's post and jumped from the wall, the guard being at the other end of his beat watching the railroad gate. One of the escapes was captured the same evening near Turner, southeast of Salem and another one was apprehended at Stayton.
