BEN WAS AWAKENED AT LAST

9000000000000000000000000

By MYRTA DAVIES

Nobody ever called Ben Flanders s success socially, and no one was further from calling Ben a success socially than Betty Huntington, only daughter of the Huntingtons of the Avenue, and sister of one of the managers of the firm where Ben worked.

Betty was as lovely as a June morning, as sweet of disposition as a pinkand-white rabbit, but, withal, with a mind of her own. Ben knew all these things, but what was a fellow to do? He knew he was "nuts" in the social world, and he knew that Betty knew, and he knew that Betty knew that he knew. Otherwise, why wouldn't she sometime invite him to at least a small party and give him a chance. to see her, if nothing more than see her surrounded by the bunch of adoring males who knew how to act, and

Betty was no snob. It wasn't be cause Ren was just a rising mechanical engineer with an invalid mother to support and not even a bowing acquaintance with the Avenue, that Betty didn't let him see her oftener. Since he had met her at the annual festival in Music hall, he had called twice, and had had the joy of seeing Betty alone, Sultors and relatives had been miraculously dispensed with. Moreover, with Betty's power of intultion, she probably renlized how beastly uncomfortable poor, unsocietyfled Ben would have been among

Anyhow, there had been something about that second call that had made Ben postpone his third, not indefinitely but, at any rate, till he got more light on the best means of pursuing his suit with the only girl in the world who was just close enough to perfection and who possessed a warm, glowing loveliness besides.

Ben was no slacker. But until he was sure-. Caution was Ben's slogan, and the fact that the fellows laughed at him for being so quiet and slow did not diminish the caution.

ATENTION LABIES—16 reers same spet. friends, all of them lending rose and orange lights, never toning down the garishness.

"I couldn't live up to that musicnot in a thousand years," grouned Ben, and dug into the mechanical engineering with greater vim than ever. Ben hustled.

It counted. Ben was promoted again. was given charge of half a dozen older but less skilled workmen, and all the while Ben did not fall to remind himself that he was doing it all for Betty.

It was exactly a week before Thanksgiving that it seemed to Ben, cautious as ever, that the time had come to make that postponed call on Miss Elizabeth Huntington on the Avenue.

Ben went, without asking if he might, only finding out casually from home. Ben was flabbergasted, and the jubliant assurance and welcome vouchsafed by Miss Betty flabbergasted him more.

"Do come in," Betty urged when the mald called her to the hall to meet Ben. "We hadn't heard from you for so long, I didn't know-. Now The North Partland Horse and Mule Co., Union Stock Yards is still in hostness. We have just received a consignment of 75 head of horses. We can supply you also with harness. Remember our address Tr. you're here, oh, please stay for the party. It's informal, anyway, planned on the spur of the moment. I do like informal things. I really do. It's-it's my engagement party, Ben-" Ben gasped. Away went his caution to the winds.

"Your-engagement-party?" "I really can't discuss it now," beamed Betty, "but I never was so happy in my life. Come on in and make me happier."

Benjamin Flanders squared his shoulders. "You bet I'll come in," he said, and marched. And, marvelous thought, for the first time in his life, as far as society usage and behavior was concerned, he did not feel in the least uncomfortable. Something more important engrossed him. Betty engaged! What a fool he'd been. He might have known if he waited he'd lose out. But confound the man who'd get ber; engagement wasn't marriage. He'd give him a close chase. If he could win out in business by sticking to it, working like a trojan, with Betty the incentive, give him the chance-Ben was a revelation that night to the people at Betty's party. He fitted into the hilarious, unorganized affair like the last and most essential part of a huge jigsaw puzzie. Before he came there had been a queer, indefinable nervousness in the air, a wondering shared by everybody about what was going to happen next. With Ben's arrival a change took place. Everybody was just as interested, even the meek little girl in brown, obvious ly a guest in the city, but things were less helter skelter. The unaccus-tomed informality that had evidently mixed up the whole party took to itself a charm that led the old-fashioned games and charades, a whole-hearted, joysome evening, with refreshments coming hours too soon.

The instant those refreshments were announced up danced Ben to Betty. "I don't care who the man is you're engaged to," he declared, "and I don't want to see him. I don't want to watch him take you in for eats, either, and I'm not going to. I've been a cad, and I'm ashamed. I've always dreamed Eugene.—A court of 12 bungalows about our marrying, you and L. Somehow or other Betty Huntington, I believed you could learn to like me. Not as much as I care about you, but some. When you told me tonight it was your engagement party, I vowed I'd give the man a close chase. I'm able if I have been a fool. You said this was an informal, impromptu party, didn't you?"

"I did," mid Betty. "Anybody know it's an engagement party yet?"

"Yes," said Betty. "Who?"

"I know it. I invited the folks." "Of course. When did you invite them?"

Betty gazed steadily into Ben's enger eyes. "I like you calm, You aren't worked up about anything, are you, Mr. Flanders?"

when you answer my question. When has been cut in half. did you invite these folks?" "Two minutes after my brother told d been so slow? I deserve it." "Not that, Ben. I wanted you here can secure in this territory. for a party-a real party-the informal, homey sort that counts, the sort I've always known you like best, the only kind where everybody has a good time. And, besides, Ben, I did want to give an engagement party."

"Yes," said Ben steadily. "Go on." "But it didn't go off till you came. Folks expect formal things here, you know. As soon as you came I knew everything would be all right, Ben,

"Get it over with. I change my mind. Who are you engaged to, Betty?" Ben swallowed hard. "He's just as lucky as I thought he was. Tell me. I'm going to congratulate him.

"Nobody," said Betty softly. Swift the change in Ben's tortured face. "Who is engaged?" he demand-

"That little girl in brown over there," Betty told him, "and nobody ever gave her any kind of a party. I wanted to, and-"

"And you wanted to-wake me up by making me think I was coming to ficials Sunday. yours? Is that it?"

"Partly." "You know what that means?"

"I ought to. Those calls of yours made me feel as if I'd always known you, and I was so happy when you came tonight. I told you so. I've always known everything you've done at the factory. My brother says I'm a nulsance asking about you every time I turn round." "We'll relieve him hereafter," said

Ben jobliantly. Nobody watching Benjamin Flan-

ington in to dinner would have mistrusted any lack of social ease and prestige. Ben was at home with the girl he loved.

Worrying Over Trifles; How We Get That Way

A month after their wedding, when they were fairly established in their Betty's brother that she would be party. Thereupon he went around in nors of California, Washington, Arizviting everyone he met to come, with a "Be sure to drop in-She is a peach and I want you to meet her right away!"

As soon as She caught on to this state of affairs she began to get pan-

"We must count chairs," she objected. "Noses, you mean, my dear," laughed

But she didn't even crack a amile she was off on an old tack that she hadn't followed since her marriage. "Everything must be planned outevery detail must be thought ofthings must go smoothly."

So she got a sheet of paper and began a list. Then she went over all her plates and cups and saucers and arranged her two rooms with an intenfor the sixth time counted pennies. Mrs. A. as soon as she arrived-and she would arrive first-was to be ushered in and settled on the sofa by the fire : when Uncle B came, he could be set to entertaining her. Then the C, twins must be put in different rooms, and Miss D and Mr. E must not be separated.

The great moment arrived. Mrs. A came last; Uncle B from first to last monopolized the twins and all three clung together happily and uncon sclously. The cracked plate went to the most formal guest, who never noticed, and the ice cream came just as they were all preparing to break up. That created a diversion and the party continued two hours past scheduled time-and the last part of the occasion was by far the jolliest of a very jolly

"Oh," said She as the door closed on the last visitor, "I had planned for Mr. E to take Miss D home!"

How do we get that way? By ex ecutive ability gone wrong. True exissues: sufficient unto the day are the little things thereof.
