New School Building Progresses Rapidly

Ione's new schoolhouse is rising rapidly. The first and second floors of the main building are now in place and the reinforced concrete columns and beams supporting the second floor were poured the first of this week. Next week contractor Anderson expects to see the second story pretty well along.

The auditorium walls and reinforced column supports for the large roof trusses are up to the height of the balcony.

The roof trusses which span the auditorium are already framed waiting to be put in place as soon as the building is ready to receive them. The balcony framing is already in place.

The electricians are on the job to begin the installation of wires and fixtures for light and power.

The contractor's records show that excavation started on the fifth day of July and actual building operations began on the 21st of the same month. It is now only a little over a month since construction started and two weeks more ought to see the roof framing in place.

Since operations began five days have been lost waiting for material.

At the present time about 25 men are employed on the building, and all but two of them are local men. The people of Ione are practically building their own schoolhouse.

Relay Races Arranged for Round-Up

Pendleton, Ore. (Special) With arrangements completed for four relay strings at the Pendleton Round-Up, to be presented for the fifteenth consecutive year, September 18, 19 and 20, the great show gives every promise of eclipsing that of all other years.

The fleet race horses owned by Geo. Drumheller, Eddie McCarty, Harry Walters and C. B. Irwin, respectively, will compete in those stellar events, the relay races, which play an important part in the Round-Up programs. Each owner brings with him competent riders for both the cowboys' and cowgirls' relay, and this year they promise an array of talent which is internationally known.

With the approach of Round-Up, work has begun on the trophies which are coveted by all the cowboys. They are the prize saddles, of handsome leather and silver trappings, which will go to the winner of the north-west bucking champion and of the world's championship bucking. In addition, there is the $2500 Roosevelt trophy of silver and bronze to be awarded the all-round cowboy at the Pendleton and Cheyenne shows. Last year the trophy was won by Yakima Canutt, who must win it twice again before he can retain possession permanently.

To the all-round cowboy of the Pendleton show goes the famous Police Gazette belt, with its gold engraved buckle. This trophy has been awarded each year since 1912, when the first award was made.

Besides the saddles and other trophies, there are cash and merchandise prizes for all events.
