Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace!

A lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies.

- Tennyson

ALONE

By Leslie Clare Manchester in Greenfield Recorder

My dreams are of the past tonight;
I feel the touch of little hands;
I feel them, 'Liza, at my knee,
The sweetest joy that e'er is man's!
And there's a pretty lullaby
I hear a-blowing in the wind;
A lullaby across the dusk
Of flowery days left far behind!

Oh, you are rocking, rocking slow
The rude low cradle I have made,
While out across the twilight hills
The pearl and primrose gleamings fade!
You kneel to kiss a tiny hand;
You smooth the snowy counterpane
And listen for a moment there
To harps of some sweet woodland strain!

The moon-flowers grow along the wall;
They turn white faces to the glass;
They watch small feet trudge off to school
And on to years of manhood pass!
They see us sweethearts as we were
Before the little toddlers came;
A love eternally the same!
They see what still the future has.

CLOUDS

By Edgar Daniel Kramer in Christian Herald

The shifting clouds
Are argosies,
Wind-blown and fraught
With hysterics,
Pale galleons
That ever go
To find the port
Our dreamings know.

With treasures heaped
High in each hold,
The moon's white wealth,
The sunset's gold,
They ever sail
The sky's blue bend,
Until they find
The rainbow's end.

Age of Figureheads

The age of sail was pregnant with strange belief and sentiment. To the imaginative and superstitious sailor the figurehead not only expressed the individuality of the craft, but it made her a living thing. To many, it was the guardian spirit in whose sacred care the inexplicable future lay. More than one old salt has refused to go to sea behind a naked bow, and when owners skimped in the matter of figurehead, shaggy eyebrows contracted and doleful predictions thundered forth as to the fate that awaited the unlucky craft.

Nature's Largest Plants

Scientists are now turning their attention to submarine farming, for the ocean beds contain rich pastures of vegetables. In the northern Pacific alone there are 2,000,000 square miles of unexplored sea bottom. As good to eat as any vegetables grown in the garden are the giant seaweeds covering 10,000 square miles off the Straits of Fuca. These kelps, as they are called, are the largest plants in the world, for the stem is often 100 feet long and carries a tuft of leaves 30 feet across.

Changes in Thought

Aids to Progression

Most men are like a book. They constantly give expression to the same thoughts. They add no new chapters to their lives. Read them backward or forward, they say the same thing.

They wonder why it is that their progress is so slow. It rarely occurs to them that they have allowed themselves to become as books. They have been diligent in their efforts to advance, but it has been along the same old beaten paths, the lines of least resistance.

A wise man abhors the idea of becoming a book. He has no vainglorious desire to go on record. He has no wish to be bound by precedent. His resolve is to maintain an unbiased mind in order that he may decide upon each new issue according to the complexities of the occasion.

Many believe it to be a mark of weakness to forsake a long-established opinion. They hold some opinions so long that they eventually come to look upon them as facts. But a fact today often becomes obsolete tomorrow. Absolute truth alone is unchangeable, but no man is ever likely to attain this goal.—J. H. Barringer, in Forbes Magazine.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

APPEARANCE ONLY

THE horse which the garrulous guide led up for me to ride over the steep rough trail from Berg Lake to Robson was a likely looking animal. He was tall and strongly built and gave evidence of some power. I looked him over before I climbed into the saddle, and felt pretty well satisfied. I like a good horse with strength and spirit who keeps up with the bunch without constant urging. "What's his name?" I asked. "Napoleon," was the reply. "I trust we shall meet no Waterloo on the way down," I suggested. Napoleon proved a very disappointing charger. He had a very alert, wide-awake appearance, but it proved mere seeming. He was in reality dead on his feet. He gave every evidence of speed when touched gently in the flanks, without much of any progress. He would forge ahead for a moment, only to fall back farther than ever. It was like working one's way across the river in a ferry boat to get any motion out of him.

We all thought Henry a wonderful fellow. He was alert, seemingly wide-awake and in for every activity that was suggested. When it was proposed that the fellows all sell bonds to help build the chapter house there was no one who appeared to take more interest in the scheme than Henry. He agreed with everything that was presented; he was sure that he could dispose of a dozen easily. He gave the impression that he was going to develop into a high-class bond salesman immediately. But we noticed ultimately that he reported no sales, his enthusiasm waned, he never got as far as first base.

It was so in everything he did. He laughed at the jokes that were told, but it was a hollow uninterested laugh, which ended in his taking no real part in the merry making. He never suggested anything, never carried things to completion which he began, had all the evidences of intellectual speed, as Napoleon had of physical progress, but he never got far.

The same thing has been true since Henry left college. He got a good job, with first-rate opportunities to make progress, and it looked at first as if he were going to make a cleaning. It was interesting to see how he catered into the work at first, but that was the end of it. It was all a show, all a camouflage. His enthusiasms died almost before they were born. He just simply looked all right, but that was as far as it went.

The famous old flag ship is shown at her berth in Philadelphia Navy Yard, the background for the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition which celebrates 150 years of American independence. Docked just in front of the Olympia is the U. S. S. Constellation, oldest fighting ship in commission. They daily attract thousands of visitors to the Exposition which continues until December 1.
