*The melancholy days have come:
The saddest of the year:
Of wailing winds and naked woods
And meadows brown and sere.
Byrant*

*'Tis the last rose of summer,
Left blooming alone.
Moore*

Heredity

"Be careful, precious," said the fond mother to her three-year-old daughter. "Remember that is mamma's best diamond pendant, and that you're to take it straight to the safe deposit company. And just a moment, darling! Here is mamma's new pearl necklace. Take that, too. And be sure to hold them both tight in your little piddle, and to hit any one who tries to take them from you with this little toy sword of your brother's."

It was but the influence of heredity asserting itself. She came, that mother, of an old family of bankers, shrewd men of business who entrusted payroll cash and negotiable securities to unarmed office boys and rheumatic watchmen.—Kansas City Times

Efficiency

"You see that man with the high forehead and the sunken eyes?"

"Yes. What is he?"

"He's an efficiency expert, he told me."

"What on earth's that?"

"The sort of man who doesn't enjoy a sea voyage because all the salt is going to waste."

THE SEA

By Bryan Wallar Proctor.

The sea! the sea! the open sea!
The blue, the fresh, the ever free!
Without a mark, without a bound,
It senneth the earth's wide regions round!
It plays with the clouds; it mocks the skies;
Or like a cradled creature lies.

I'm on the sea! I'm on the sea!
I am where I would ever be;
With the blue above and the blue below,
And silence whereso'er I go,
If a storm should come and awake the deep,
What matter? I shall ride and sleep.

I never was on the dull, tame shore,
But I loved the great sea more and more,
And backward flew to her billowy breast,
Like a bird that seeketh its mother's nest;
And a mother she was, and is, to me;
For I was born on this open sea!

And I have loved thee, Ocean! and my joy
Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be
Born, like thy bubbles, onward . . .
Lord Byron

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

LEANING ON FATHER

WALTON is twenty-two years of age, and so far as I have been able to discover, has never really earned a dollar. He has been to an expensive preparatory school, he will finish college next year, and he has not been an example of rigid economy and sacrifice.

The evening paper a few weeks ago announced the fact that Walton is engaged to be married to a very well-known and always well-dressed young woman in our community. The exact date of the marriage has not been set, but the probabilities are that it will be as soon after his graduation as Walton can get his father to agree to, and since the boy has never been kept waiting long, we can expect the marriage shortly.

"Have you seen Anna's ring?" Mrs. Burton asked me. We were at a dance where the newly engaged couple were also in attendance. "It is certainly beautiful," she went on.

It was, indeed, as I had to agree when I caught sight of the jewel on Anna's finger, and it cost a pretty penny which George himself had done no work or made no sacrifice to accumulate. In this case, as in others, he had simply leaned on father who came across with the price.

George talks freely about his approaching nuptials even though the exact date is not set.

"We haven't made up our minds just where we shall go for our honeymoon," I heard him say one day to a friend. "Father is willing to finance a trip around the world if we want that sort of thing, but I'm not sure." Everything was all right; he could lean securely on father.

Corwin is moving to town in the fall. His only son is to enter college and he has never been away from home before, and he has never thought for himself before, and his father is afraid to let him try, so he is coming along to act as a convenient post. Whenever young Corwin grows tired or discouraged, his father will be near at hand for the boy to lean against.

All the same, these things make me wonder. When it comes to things so precious as starting a home or buying an engagement ring or going on a wedding journey, wouldn't the young man feel a good deal more manly if he had done something to earn these things himself?

SHORTHORN STEER "E-DA-HO II"

Grand Champion Pacific International Livestock Exposition 1925. Bred, Fed and Exhibited by University of Idaho, Moscow

The State of Idaho became famous during the 1925 Pacific International Livestock Exposition through the splendid showing made by its livestock entries. One of the State's outstanding awards was Grand Champion Steer, bred, fed and exhibited by the University of Idaho, Moscow.

Keen competition will prevail this year, for Oregon, Washington, Montana, California and British Columbia are all sending entries which they believe will secure the premier award.

It is an inspiration to go through the mammoth ten-acre building visiting the exhibits of cattle, sheep, swine, heavy draft horses, night horse show horses. A big, new Fox Show will be offered this year for the first time. The American National Fox Breeders' Association have decided to make the Pacific International headquarters for an annual show.

The Industrial Exhibit offers much that is of intense interest, showing raw materials being converted into finished articles, and other manufactured products of many kinds. Then there is the Land Products Show and the splendid Dairy Products Show.

Here it is possible, in one day, to get a bird's-eye view of agricultural and industrial developments and activities in the West.

The railroads are again co-operating by offering round trip fares at one and one-third rates. Full particulars can be obtained from the local agent.

Over $100,000.00 in premium money is offered, the biggest livestock premium list offered anywhere in America. Pacific International dates this year are October 30-November 6 inclusive; the place—Portland, Oregon.
