FOREST RECEIPTS PASS MILLION AND QUARTER

Total receipts of $1,209,173 are reported from the Forest Service from the 22 national forests of Oregon and Washington during the fiscal year 1927, which ended June 30 this year.

The bulk of the money came from timber sales, which show a total of $1,092,608. Grazing fees come next with $169,285. Summer homestead permits and other forms of special use stand third with $24,131. Other sources of receipts are water power and various forms of trespass.

Of the 22 national forests the Olympic in western Washington leads with a total of $289,814, while the Crater national forest in southern Oregon is second with $222,280. Two other forests exceed the hundred thousand mark for the year, the Deschutes with $145,207 and the Willows with $106,57.

Twenty-five per cent of these receipts are returned to the States and counties for the road and school funds, and an additional ten per cent is made available for road and trail work by the Forest Service.

EXTENSION OF QUOTA LAW

The New York State Chamber of Commerce has passed a resolution urging that the quota provision of the Immigration act of 1924 be extended to Canada, Mexico, South and Central American countries and the West Indies. This action was said to have been prompted by the efforts of alien groups to influence the action of Congress in behalf of special interests of particular political groups or nations which, in the opinion of the chamber, do not assist in the assimilation of the foreigner into the national life of the country of their choice. There was only one objection to this resolution.

Ox-Wagon Fortress

Lazear is a term that was first applied by the Boers of South Africa to a defensive camp improvised out of ox-wagons. The wagons are arranged in a circle close together, with the baggage piled up between the wheels so as to form a continuous rampart.

Northern Superstition

Elf was the wicked magician of Northern folklore, squat of figure, ugly of feature, and with long-matted hair. The elves were supposed to wound cattle and men with their elf-arrows—stone arrow heads—and children were removed from their cradles and replaced by imbecile elf-children.
