Error Led to Travel

How an Englishman made a mistake, then saw America on a dead man's ticket, has recently been told in London. According to his story he joined a party of Scandinavian emigrants crossing the landing stage at Liverpool in the belief that he was on the way to the Isle of Man, and went up the gangway of an Atlantic liner. A few hours later he began to suspect he was going astray, and mentioned the matter to a member of the party of emigrants who could, he had discovered, speak English. "Next stop Queenstown," the man said, "and after that New York. But never mind. When we were crossing the North sea one of our party died, so we have a spare ticket, to which you are welcome. Come with us to America." After some reflection the vacationist accepted, and saw America.

Scarlet Uniform Not Conspicuous in Field

The writers of American school histories have frequently taken occasion to remark scornfully upon the scarlet uniform worn by the British regulars in the campaigns against the Indians during Colonial days, but, as a matter of fact, the scarlet coat of the Briton was a less conspicuous uniform than the blue subsequently adopted for the army of the United States.

Careful experiments have brought out the fact that light gray, such as that worn by the West Point cadets, is the color first lost to sight in the field. Scarlet comes next, with dark gray, blue and green in the order named. In target practice it has been found that of all colors scarlet is most difficult to hit. Light green is almost invisible under the violet tinge of electric lights, and would, therefore, be an excellent color for the uniforms of naval scouts who would be exposed to the eyes of an enemy's searchlights.
