TYPHOID FEVER

An epidemic of 37 cases of typhoid in a city in the southern part of this state points out the fact that eternal vigilance is necessary to prevent the outbreak of epidemics. Before the days of modern water purification, typhoid fever was held to be chiefly a water borne disease. During the past few years, however, we find that typhoid is more often milk borne in origin. Few diseases present the striking contrast of the past with the present as does typhoid fever. Not many years ago this disease was a pest which was present in the population all the time and each fall it was expected that it would take on epidemic proportions. It is now within the power of any community to bring down and keep down the typhoid fever rate to, or nearly to the vanishing point. Since water supplies have been largely improved, milk has become probably the most common vehicle in the transmission of this disease. It has numerous opportunities for contamination. The hands of the milker may not be clean and the utensils may have been washed in unclean water. If the typhoid germ gets into the milk while it is warm, it finds an excellent culture medium and as a result increases so that a slight contamination becomes massive.

The utmost care must be taken in handling milk. Milk epidemics present characteristic peculiarities.

The cases follow a certain milk route. They are mostly found among women and children, or at least among those who use milk in its raw state.

No person should handle foods who has recently had typhoid or who is a typhoid carrier. Washing the hands before handling food and before eating is not a fad. It is the best of common sense and prudence. Nobody should eat without washing hands. Boil your drinking water and your milk unless you are sure that the supply is pure.

Today's Good Thought
Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do ingloriously, by licensing and prohibiting to misedoubt her strength. Let her and falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worst in a free and open encounter.—Milton.

Surroundings Counted

William had brought a little playmate home from school. After he left, William's mother thought to improve the chance and remarked: "He was a very polite little boy. I think he was more of a gentleman than you are sometimes." "Of course he was polite," was the answer. "He was in a strange house. I am polite, too, when I am away from home."

First Express Company

The first person to enter the field of transporting articles of merchandise by express carrier was William Frederick Harnden of Boston. He made his first trip from that city to New York on February 23, 1838, having only enough to fill an ordinary valise. In a few months he employed two carriers and extended the service to Philadelphia.

Strictly Business

The candy store woman always gave Lucy an extra piece of candy, saying, "I give you an extra piece for good luck." Lucy walked into the store and said, "I can't buy today, but you can give me the extra piece for good luck that you always give me when I buy."

Age of Progress

The history of the world consists mostly in the memory of those ages quite few in number, in which some part of the world has risen above itself and burst into flower or fruit. We ourselves happen to live in the midst or possibly in the close of such a period. More change has probably taken place in daily life, in ideas and in the general aspect of the earth during the last century than during any other four centuries since the Christian era; and this fact has tended to make us look on rapid progress as a normal condition of the human race, which it has never been.
