"It's worth a moment of the keenest happiness mortals can know! Di-vine happiness! Isn't that enough?"

"'Divine'? I thought that there word meant somepin else-I thought it belonged to Jesus-"

"A divine moment, Meely, such as fow ever know in the stereotyped marriage relation, my girl, believe me !"

"It ain't that I expec' you to marry me, Mr. Creighton-I know I can't rise to that. But if I can't rise to that, I can't fall to nothin' else between you and me, neither !"

The earnestness of her resistance was beginning to alarm him. Surely she did not mean all she was saying! She only wanted to be coaxed, per-suaded. Surely it only needed a little patience on his part to bring her to the yielding point? But patience was a thing he was so unused to exercising that it taxed his nerves and his temper almost more than he could The little hussy must be very bear. experienced, she knew so well how to enhance her own value and stimulate his desire by her stand-offishness!

"Think, Meely, how stupid it is not to seize every chance that comes our way (few enough they are!) for happiness ! Look at all the coloriess years ahead of you, and don't miss this one ineffable hour !- such as will never be offered you once you're married !" "Will your marriage hold you from any more such hours?"

"That's neither here nor there-my marriage, Meely, is quite another affair-'

"Meanin' it ain't none of my affairs? Well, but it's the affair of your wife, anyhow, whether you have any such grand hours-"

"My dear, we won't discuss my possible wife !"

"I'd feel awful sorry," said Meely, slowly shaking her head, "for your wife, Mr. Creighton."

He laughed uneasily. "Judging by the way I'm pursued by marriageable giris. Meely, your view of me as a husband can't possibly be the one generally held by many indies of high degree ! You don't know your luck, my girl !"

"Yes, well, but them 'ladles of high degree' run after you to marry you. You ain't astin' me to marry you.' "I'm offering you a love such as I shall probably never feel for the girf I marry! Oh, "Meely!" He reached for her hand, but she drew it away. "Meely! You'll lose me, you know, if you keep this up! You can't keep me dangling forever, you know!" The words, "keep me dangling." startled his own enrs, so ridiculous was the iden of a girl such as Meely keeping him "dangling"! "If you do lose me, you'll only have yourself to thank !" "What would I be losin' in losin' you?" she asked as one humbly seek-gaze when he was about to get inte his car, parked near the schoolhouse did not decrease his mental confusion, nor serve to soothe his rasped nerves and outraged vanity.

Marvin Creighton, approaching William Penn schoolhouse at half-past five that afternoon, on his way to his temporary home at Absalom Punts' cottage, noticed on the road far ahead of him a slim girlish figure in a long loose coat, burrying along the highway. Though the daylight was fading. her carriage of herself and the set of her clothing were so conspicuously dif-ferent from that of any country girl one was apt to meet alone on the road at this hour that even in this dimness that hurrying figure was sharply impressive. Carlosity made him quicken his pace to catch up with her. But before he had overtaken her, she had arrived at William Penn schoolhouse. where, to his surprise, she stopped and went In.

Then it was, as he had half suspect ed, half hoped, a little dreaded, Miss Schwenckton !

A few yards before he reached the school he came upon a roadster, parked along the road, which he recognized as his brother's. The idea stubbed him that this attractive young teacher and St. Croix might be having a rendezvous in the school! Was St. Croix in there with her now? He was such a philanderer-sometimes so un-scrupulous-the girl ought to be put on her guard.

"But darned if I want to be the one to warn her! And if ever a girl seemed capable of looking out for herself, she's it !"

In a minute he was at the schoolhouse door. It was slightly ajar; he pushed it open a bit wider and, not entering, glanced in. The sight that met his eye made him draw back precipitately-Miss Schwenckton, her back toward the door, was standing on her platform disrobing! She had already taken off her coat and frock, her white shoulders bared-

There was no one else in the schoolroom, yet-

Marvin stumbled back a pace from the door. But though the thought that pierced him made him call himself "a cad," yot as he stood there wondering whether he should knock. he felt cold all over; and even while he hesitated, in what seemed to him an incredibly short time, she suddenly appeared before him in the doorway clad in a jacket suit and a jaunty sports hat! He was so taken aback. so utterly confused, that he could not move or speak, but stood as stockstill as the wooden posts of the school porch. At sight of a man standing motionless at her door in the gathering gloom, she cried out in alarm-which brought him to himself.

"Only! And of whom, pray, should I be more frightened?-though the schoolroom being empty just now, of course you can't bully me into teach-"Going home now?"

"Yes."

Before He Could Lay a Finger on Her to Stop Her, She Had Turned and

"It's time I got home-Pop will be missin' me."

He sprang up too-his face almost purple with the strain of his selfrestraint-but the look in her eyes halted him. One step toward her, her eyes said to him, and she would shrick to arouse the countryside.

"No-" said the personal representative of the great movie actor, "but he will."

Better Light, Better Work

Tests have been made in England recently to determine the effect of degrees of artificial lighting various on the accuracy and speed of the individual. Typesetting by hand was the work chosen, and in order to avoid week-end conditions the tests were made in the middle of the week. It was found that the output steadily increased as the intensity of artificial illumination increased. The total errors and the percentage of inverted letters decreased.

Ah, thought St. Croix, light dawning on his troubled mind, so it was that that was holding her back !--she had heard of his betrothal and was jenlous!

"I give you my word, Meely, that I am not-as yet-engaged."

"I heard you was," she repeated stubbornly. "What would that cousin think of you if she knowed-about me?"

"That need not worry you!" "Oh, needn't it !"

"Why should it? I have not seen this cousin since we were both children-and I am not-definitely-betrothed to her."

"But you're plannin' to be." "Well, surely, my dear girl, it will hurt you far less if I marry some one I don't love-some one I don't really know-a person I've not seen since she was a homely little bow-legged kld !"

"'Bow-legged'!" exclaimed Meely indignantly.

"Yes, and pigeon-toed and towheaded and freckle-faced! You'll not be hurt by my marriage," he exclaimed fervently, "you beautiful thing!"

"Yes, well, but how about hurtin' her! When you even love another one !"

"She'll be doing the same thing, probably !" he defended himself. "It's purely a family arrangement," he answered, frowning impatiently at being forced into a discussion of his personal affairs; to his peculiar ideas of fitness it was a desecration to even so much as name his cousin-his future wife, no doubt-to a girl like Meely Schwenckton.

"Are you so sure she'll be willin' to marry you without lovin' you and without your lovin' her?" Meely asked onderingly.

Nothing could have been more dis-

"Meely," he exclaimed huskily, what do you mean? Why, if you don't love me, have you led me on all these weeks? Why have you come here to meet me? Why? Tell me that-why?"

"To find out," she answered in an even tone, "what sort of a man you are. And," she added with a smile that pitled him, "I have found out !" Before he could lay a finger on her to stop her, she had turned and fled. By the time he had recovered from the bewildering shock of her words, her tone, she was far down the hilltoo far for him to overtake her-even if he had not realized, to his stunned amazement, the absolute uselessness of overtaking her.

That he had been repudiated by this girl who for nearly three months had let him treat her contemptuously, had submitted to his bullying, his rudeness, his irritability, had accepted and returned his lavish caresses! All the way down the hill and along the highway toward the spot near the schoolhouse, where today he had parked his car, he stared incredulously at the amazing fact.

But a scene that met his bewildered

Brother of Tecumseh Neglected by History

Elkswatawa, younger brother of [Tecumseh, was largely responsible for the part that great Indian warrior statesman played in organizing and a federation of the red men to op-pose the encronchments of the whites. In 1805 Elkswatawa proclaimed himself a religious leader and began to arouse the tribes of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois, to the great disturbance of the settlers. His doctrines were not primarily revolutionary, but temperance and total abstinence were tenets. together with reverence for old age and sympathy for the infirm. He also urged his people to resist intermarringe and to preserve their own cus-toms and costumes. This being in line with what all Indians had held as ideal previous to Caucasian invasion, his preaching caused much excitement among the tribes and fear among the whites. It was the response of the Indians to his brother's pleading that started Tecumseb on his mission in the cause of federation which took him to the Cherokees and the other more civilized tribes of the South, in the course of which he covered many thousand miles.

a few rods away. That look of sur-prise seemed so genuine, it was hard to believe that his own unexpected arrival at the school had folled a meeting between these two. And yet it would be so like St. Croix to seek a furtive love affair with a charming girl like Miss Schwenckton when he'd die before he would openly associate with anyone of a class outside his own !--- like a parvenu uncertain of his position, rather than like a man born to a secure place in the sun! But that a girl of Miss Schwenckton's spirit should accept such cowardly atentions seemed incredible. And this mystery of her changing her clothing in the schoolroom !-As they turned their backs on the car and went on their way, neither of them referred to it-though Meely was so absorbed in wondering whether St. Crolx had recognized her that her sense of Marvin's interesting companlonship was less keen than it would otherwise have been.

"Does your work always detain you so late as this at your school?" he asked with subtle gulle. She didn't know he had seen her coming alons the highway ! (TO BE CONTINUED.)
