'PEOPLES OWNERSHIP OF POWER' COMPANIES the best OWNERSHIP'

Says The INDIANAPOLIS UNION:
No longer is the control of our public service enterprises an issue between public and private ownership. A more correct term would be, "public versus political ownership."

As a result of opening the doors of these to the participation of employees, customers, and the investing public generally as shareholders, public service organizations today are becoming in an increasing degree, great community enterprises.

Capital is being divorced from management and management left free to devote its best talents to the interests of the public. This is public ownership at its best.

The electric power industry has been a leader in creating investment channels whereby the small investor may enjoy all the benefits heretofore reserved for the capitalist. In no other industry is there such widespread diffusion of ownership.

Only the support of the public, and the splendid zeal of individual initiative working under those conditions of freedom of opportunity for which America stands, could have made such an achievement possible.

To the extent that this support is maintained in the future, and this freedom protected, may the American people count upon the continuance of that quality of service which has made their standards of working and living the envy of the whole world.

"Public ownership will not do, but ownership of the utilities by the people as individuals is quite another matter. The public's investment in public utility securities is much greater than is usually supposed. We must get away from the idea that public utility ownership is a big man's game."
