THE NEW STATESMEN

IT was Locke, the great economist and philosopher, who wrote "The purpose of business is to keep a man occupied for the prosperity of the Commonwealth."

Locke's definition of business is being applied today as never before. The engineer and the scientist have become the statesmen of a new State that is industrial in form and economic in purpose.

In its contribution to the general welfare of the public, it is doubtful if any industry in the history of the has rendered a greater service than the electrical industry.

That America to day enjoys living advantages approached by no other country is due in no small measure to the fact that American manufacturers and workmen have at their command more electric power than is available to all the rest of the world.

The electric light and power industry has consistently extended the usefulness of its service, while materially reducing its rates. This education meant a saving in 1927 of five hundred million dollars to domestic consumers alone.
