THE "ZERO" HOUR

Shadows lengthen: . . . The city's lights begin to glow. A call comes through the load dispatcher's desk and the man at the generator control board knows that the "zero" hour is at hand.

Eftly, skillfully, he "floats" one generator after another — each a giant as strong as a million men — thru increasing speeds until they come within 1-500 of a second of absolute synchronization with the generators carrying the day load.

Then the great switch is thrown. The strength of four million men goes "over the top" — over the wires to homes, to theaters, to transportation lines — in answer to the city's call for the electricity on which modern life depends.

As you make fuller use of the pten tialities of electric service, that service is enabled to increase its usefulness not only to you, but to every department of our social and business life.
