IONE, OREGON, FRIDAY, Feb. 7, 1920

NUMBER 35

Pioneer Resident of Ione Passes

Mrs. Alice Keller, long a resident of Ione, passed away at her home here, Wednesday night.

Her death was not discovered until Thursday noon when her nephew, Paul Baulsiger, as was his custom, brought her mail. Seeing that she had not risen, he opened into the bedroom and found her dead in bed, evidently having passed away in her sleep without a struggle.

Funeral services will be held at the Congregational church, Saturday afternoon at 1:30 with interment in the Ione cemetery.

Has to Be Ingrown

There is no formula for a successful personality.—The American Magazine.

Doesn't Seem Right

"I never could understand," said Uncle Eben, "why, most usually, a good talker makes more money than a hard worker."—Washington Star.

The Strain

Scientists say we all have a strain of insanity in us. They may be right, or wrong. The surest way of proving they are right is to worry about it. Dismiss morbid fears from your mind.

Middle-Age Commerce

The fairs held in the Middle Ages were an extension of the idea of the town market. As one writer remarks: "Fairs represented the most important form of commercial activity of the time."

Contented absorption in some activity is good for the disposition; when we are absorbed we don't stop to bother about small worries.—American Magazine.

Mending Books
If the binding of a book is loose it can be strengthened in the following manner: Cut a strip of linen the length of the book and about an inch and a half wide, then crease it down the middle and finally glue it inside the cover at the joint. Secure the front and back covers in this way and then place the book under a weight.
