Own Giving

There is a reciprocal relationship between our giving and the blessings which will come to us.—Rev. Samuel D. Price.

Land of Stunted Trees

Trees more than 20 feet high are rare in Iceland, and the birch, mountain ash and willow found there are all of stunted growth.

Supplants Steel Wool

Steel wool is said to have been superseded in many of its fields of usefulness by the invention of a somewhat similar nature in which copper is used instead of steel. The mass is said to be as soft as a sponge, and has a marvelous ability for cleansing pots and pans in the kitchen and other metal surfaces which have become rusted or otherwise incrustated. The copper is said to be absolutely scratchless.

Primitive Peoples

Certain tribes of the Kalahari desert bushmen are said to bury their sick while still alive, because their religious beliefs forbid the touching of human corpses. Another tribe has been found in the same section who was too low in the scale of civilization even to build huts to live in, preferring to live in the holes made by anthears, which they enlarge by scraping out earth.
