AUTO ACCIDENTS

The slippery highway was the cause of three automobile wrecks near Ione last week. A car went into the ditch and was badly wrecked near the Frank Mason ranch on Rhea Creek. The wreck was called from Heppner to move the damaged car. We understand the driver was unhurt. A few miles below Ione, the same day, Mike Rowell had a wheel torn from his car, but no one was injured. Near town a car driven by Robert Marty, of Pendleton, collided with a car driven by Al Hendrickson of Ione. Both cars were badly damaged and a wreck er came from Heppner to move them.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Griffith, and their family came to spend the day with her. The self invited guests brought a roasted turkey and all the fixin's for the dinner. The occasion was Mrs. Hawk's birthday.

Work on the Ione Bordman road has been stopped until the weather moderates.

Mrs. Wrex Hienck returned Friday to her home in Portland after a pleasant visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. E.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Engelman went to Portland on Thursday of last week. They made a trip by stage.

The Lighted Lamp

By ETHEL P. BIRD

SIX-YEAR-OLD Ginny dug her bare brown toes into the cool green dampness of the grass where the dew was beginning to gather. "Auntie Em, why'n't you get you a husband?" she asked of the woman who sat in the willow rocker on the porch above her.

"If you did that I could have a really truly uncle like the rest of the girls and boys in our crowd. Didn't you ever know anybody that wanted to be your husband? Didn't you ever think about getting married?"

Emily Hargreaves came and sat on the top porch step to stem the tide of eager questions. "There are cookies in the big stone jar, Ginny," she said. "don't you want some? And will you light the lamp before you come out again?"

The handful of cookies filled the child mind with other thoughts, and she curled up in the wicker arms, sleepily, when she returned to the porch. But she had started the train of forbidden memories for her aunt.

In the lot at one side of the house a baseball game was in progress; but as darkness fell it resolved into blind-man's buff, crack-the-whip and a general scuffle. Lights pricked out in the windows of other houses along the shaded street. But Miss Hargreaves' orange moon of radiance was the first to rise.

In the little church on the other side of Miss Hargreaves' home the choir had met for practice for the next day.

They chose a familiar anthem for the coming day—Dudley Buck's arrangement for "My Redeemer and My Lord." Through the wide-open windows of the church came the words and music to the listener on the Hargreaves porch—"That hereafter I may meet Thee"—the child stirred in Emily's arms as a faint "Hoo—Hoo!" sounded from across the street.

Emily's voice was carefully pitched as she answered the hall—"Let her stay with me tonight. She's asleep now." She held the warm little body close and gave herself up completely to the memories that sometimes would not be denied. Swiftly before the eyes of her mind unfolded that pageant of long-gone dreams. Once she had thought about a husband and about marriage. About holding her own child to her heart as she now clasped this one.

No wonder Ginny asked. For Ginny had never known that gay lad whose gray eyes laughed into Auntie Em's darker ones. Ginny had never heard that deep and tender voice that had sounded as none other in Emily Hargreaves' ears. Ginny did not know what it meant to find one's heart's desire—only to lose it.

Over and over again the choir sang the familiar lines of the anthem. Vaguely Miss Hargreaves noted the constant repetitions. But she did not know that the song was being repeated at the request of a stranger who had dropped into the rehearsal with the choir director and professed a special pleasure in that song.

Through years of waiting in the inevitable shiftings of the sands of time. Through change of scene and loss and gain in friends and family, Emily Hargreaves had stayed—waiting. Not she to forget, to find solace in a lesser love even if the best were gone forever. Though the long-ago sweet-heart knew not where to seek her now, she still waited for him. And kept her light burning in the window. Even six-year-old Ginny knew the oddity of Auntie Em's lamp that was always the first to flash through the twilight of the fading day.

The choir voices rose to a last crescendo—"With my lamp well trimmed and burning!" The organ rumbled to a final chord. The lights flickered out as the choir members slipped through the vestry and out to the porch and walk.

The stranger stroked into the street and stood looking about. A gleam of orange light slanted from the window of the house next door and struck across his face. "Who lives there?" he idly asked his host.

"Queer name," was the reply. "It's cracked, most everybody thinks. Came here to live near her brother several years ago; just after the war, I guess. I don't remember very well—I wasn't home at the time. She plays a regular game with her brother's kid every night—something about lighting the lamp. Harmless—she is, at that. Maybe I shouldn't have called her that. Jim Hargreaves would break every bone in my body if he heard me—"

"Hargreaves!"—the stranger leaped the hedge at a bound, and sped across the grass, now wet and sparkling in the moonlight with the heavy dew, to where a woman sat in the radiance of the yellow lampshade, a half-awake child stiding from her lap.

"Mumme," said Ginny, as she crept up the steps of her own porch a few minutes later. "I bet Auntie Em's going to get her a husband. There's a man over to her house, an' he's got her in his arms an' she's laughin' an' cryin' like ever'body, all at once. He'd be an uncle for me, wouldn't he?"
