Face of Dead Empress Reproduced on Carpet

Of all the carpets in creation, the most famous in the world is the Muntax Mahal carpet, which was made to order at the earnest desire of Shah Jehan, says an article in the Illustrated Weekly of India. Soon after the untimely death of the beloved empress, Shah Jehan commissioned his court painter to reproduce her likeness from his memory. The emperor was not satisfied with the painting and so contemplated having the likeness of his dearly loved wife reproduced on a carpet. He himself drew a rough sketch of the design meant for this carpet; the materials for the carpet were also imported from that country. The most rigid secrecy in the execution of this project was necessary lest the religious prejudices of the orthodox subjects be aggravated.

The Taj or the Muntax Mahal carpet measures 20 feet by 20 feet and contains 57,000,000 knots. It took 20 years for its accomplishment. The likeness of the empress was reproduced on this carpet and also that of the principal members of her family.
