SPRING CAMPAIGN SALE

THE FAIR DEPARTMENT STORE opens the campaign with hot shots at high prices that bring them tumbling down within the reach of all. This is a season of unusually high prices in all lines and the effect is keenly felt by the average retailer, but our patrons will not notice it because of the fact that we belong to the Cash Buyers' Union, comprising over 60 large stores, who buy and sell for cash, and ordinary conditions do not affect us, and the people are not slow to appreciate the many advantages of our system, the main one being the saving in money. We raise the standard of quality without raising the price

RAWLINS POST NO. 31, G. A. R. MEET AT Odd Fellows' Hall at Heppner, every third Saturday of each month. G. W. RHEA, Adj. G. W. SMITH, Com.

THURSDAY, APR 14, 1904.

La Grande seems determined in her fight for the county seat. The County Court of Union county has decided the relocation of the county seat from Union to La Grande may be voted upon by the people of Union county at the general election to be held in June.

At last Congress has passed the Lewis Clark Fair bill, which appropriate $475,000 for that historical event. This makes nearly $2,000,000 for the fair including appropriations by various states for their individual state exhibits. It is now up to the fair commission to make the exposition a success.

The open season for trout fishing now being on it stands the finny tribe in hand to keep on the lookout until November. There is no more popular sport than angling. It affords needed exercise and calls for physical and mental activities that are a welcome change from indoor life. The coming in close touch with nature is in itself invigorating to both body and mind, and men in all stages of life, from the budding of youth to the gray haired man of 70, all enjoy the sport alike.

The Telegram gives some facts below in regard to opening of the Columbia river that will be of interest to all Eastern Oregon. It says: "As time passes there appears to be a growing doubt as to the construction of the portage road in accordance with the will of the people of this state, as expressed through their representatives in the Legislature. The sentiment is being strengthened that the right-of-way for the road and that required for the construction of the canal conflict in such manner as to render infeasible the acquisition of both. In this view of the matter the argument is that the permanent improvement takes precedence, and the public is being gradually educated to the abandonment of the portage road project. In this apparent drift of sentiment pertaining to the attainment of an open river, or at least to the early realization of conditions that will be the equivalent thereof, there is a strong element of doubt as to whether the interests of this Columbia River territory would best be served if it should ultimately prevail. Admitting the difficulties that are involved in the situation, the fact is as incontrovertible now as when the portage bill passed the Legislature, that the construction of the road insures immediate relief to the people who live above the rapids on the Columbia River. As between what is promised in this consideration and what will result from the construction of the canal, the element of time cuts a most significant figure. The history of river improvement in this state, that has been accomplished by Congressional aid, is not calculated to be reassuring to those who would anticipate the early completion of the canal. From any reasonable basis it may safely be assumed that nearly, or quite, a decade will pass before the Columbia River is finally opened by this improvement. This is a conclusion borne out by events in the past and the strong probabilities of the future. What is to be done during those ten years, or possibly a longer period? The appropriation for the construction of the portage road was the answer given by the people of Oregon through their Legislative representatives. Is it for the best interests of the state that this answer be allowed to dissipate in a cloud negation, consisting of post-legislative doubts and difficulties?
