

AMPHOLERY.

"Do you love me, dearest?" These words were spoken by Algernon Montfzberg, who held in his dainty little hand of Arethusia Clarendon, the only daughter of Squire Clarendon of Clarendon Hill, Clarendonshire, Arethusia's shapely head drooped in maidenly modesty, but it was for a moment only. Instantly she raised her head and looking the young man full in the face she fervently replied, "I do, Algernon, with all my heart." "Thank you," Algernon replied; "of course its flattering to know it. I only asked out of curiosity, you know." Thus ended the love dream of the fair Arethusia. But she made no complaint. When the subject is mentioned she merely says that she remained single for choice.

A party of young ladies were visiting a photograph gallery on Rhea creek. "Do you know, girls," carelessly observed one of them, "that in the photographer's camera everything stands on its head?" "It can't be possible," exclaimed one of the young ladies, growing pale, and trembling like an aspen leaf. "You don't mean that?" "But it's so; why? What's the matter with you?" said the speaker. "Mercy on me! Why, I had my photograph taken here last Monday and—and—I—oh, it's just too terrible for anything!"

A sailor was one night ordered aloft to act as lookout. The mate had a grudge against the aforesaid sailor and so let him remain fully on his own before he asked him if he saw "any light." "Not yet," replied the sailor, "but if you let me remain here another hour I'll surely see something." An hour passed by and then the lookout cried: "I see a light." "What light is it?" inquired the mate. "Daylight," was the reply.

"Where are you going, Mary?" "Across the street to lunch with Nellie Blank." "Are you sure there are no strange characters lurking around?" "I have looked out of all the windows and cannot see any one except, of course, the detectives." "Have you noticed them that you wished to go out?" "Yes, and they promised to be on the alert." "You have your revolver and bowie-knife and police rattle in your pockets, of course?" "Yes, ma." "Well, you may go, but don't stay long, for it looks like rain and your cartridges might get damp."

"Your daughter has a touch of malaria," said a physician to a New York lady. "I will call again in the morning." The mother then went to her daughter's room with a look of great anxiety on her face, and said: "My dear, the doctor says you have malaria. What is it? Is it dangerous?" "Not very, mamma, and oh, it is so aristocratic! I will wear my blue silk wrapper, and we must get some cut-glass bottles for the medicines, and if any of the Sauffles girls call have them brought to my room. It will take them down a peg or two, I can assure you." And the sick young woman looked the very picture of happiness and content.

"Why do boys run away from home?" asks an exchange. There are several reasons. When a boy turns a grindstone for his father to sharpen an axe and the cut iron beads on so hard that the sparks fly from the stone, and the boy's eyes and tongue hang out in the 107,846th round, and after an hour's turning his arms feel as if they were coming out by the roots, and his father looks up and asks, as he knows he has more work to do, "Does it turn hard?"—then the boy decides to run away from home and become a pirate or a cowboy, or some other kind of outlaw. No doubt many a Heppner boy has been tempted to vamose the paternal ranch because his father struck him to work at the grindstone, or something else when other boys were having a good time on the race track playing hide-and-seek among the fence-posts.

A Weston lady, while engaged in the pursuit of her domestic duties, encountered a mouse in the flour barrel. Now, most ladies, under similar circumstances, would have uttered a few genuine shrieks, and then sought safety in the garret; but this one possessed more than the ordinary degree of genuine courage. She summoned a neighbor and told him to get the dog, and station himself at a convenient distance. Then she clambered up stairs and commenced to punch the flour barrel with a pole. Presently the mouse made its appearance, and started across the floor. The dog started at once in pursuit. The man fired, and the dog dropped dead. The lady fainted, fell down the stairs, and the man, thinking she was killed, and fearing that he would be arrested for murder, disappeared, and has not been heard of since.
