1738 and ran for king in 1769. He was a son of Frederick. Prince of Wales, and held the office of king for sixty years.

the office of king for sixty years.

He was a natural bora king and succeeded his gran lifather George H. Look as you will adown the long page of English history and you will not fail to notice the scarcity of self-made kings. How few of them were poor boys and had to skin along for years with no money no influential thom were poor boy; and had to skin along for years with no money, no influential friends and no fun. Ah, little does the English king know of hard times and carrying two or the barrels of water to a tired slephant in order that he may get into the alternoon performance without money. When he gets tired of being prizes, all he has to do is just to be king all day at good wages, and then at night take off his high-priced crown, hang it up on the hat-rack, put on a soft hat and take in the town.

About to take in the town. George III quit being prince at the age of 22 years and began to hold down the English throne. He would reign along for a few years, taking it kind of quiet, and then all at once he would declare war and pick out some people to go shread and leave their skeletons on some foreign shore. That was George's favorite emusement. He got up the Spanish war in two years after he ciome the throne; then he had an American ciome the tarone; then he had an American revolution, a French revolution, an Irish rebellion and a Napoleonic war. He dearly loved carnage if it could be prepared on a foreign strain!. George always wanted imperted carnage even if it came higher. It was in 1765 and early in George's raign that the American stomp and passed the logishture and the Goddess of Liberty began to kick over the dashboard.

George was different from most English kings morally. When he spit on his hand and grasped the scepter he took his scruples and grasped the scepter he took his scruples with him right onto the throne. He was pot talked about half so much as other kings before or since his time. Nine o'clock most givays found George in hed, with his acepter forder the window such, so that he could toder the window sush, so that he could have pleasty of fresh air. As it got along toward $\theta$ o'clock he would call the hired girl, tell her to spread a linen lap-rote on the throne till morning, issue a royal ukaso directing her to turn out the cut, and in-structing the cook to set the pancake bat-ter behind the royal stove in the council chamber, then he would wind the clock and rotice. Early in the morning George would be up and dressed, have all his chores done, and the throne dusied off rendy for another hard day's reign.

George III is the party referred to in the declaration of independence as the present bing of Great "Britain, and of whom many hitter personal remarks were made by American rattricts On this side of the weter bad come over here to spend the summer with friends in Boston, during the days of the stamp act excitement, he could have gone home packed in ice, no doubt, and

Always before that he had gone right ahead with his reign, whether he was crazy or not, but with the fifth attack of fasanity, coupled with suggestion of the train and blind stoggers, it was decided to tie him up in the barn and let some one clae reign awhile. The historian says that blind-ress succeeded this attack, and in 1811 the George was of an inventive turn of mind, and used to be monkeying with some kind of a patent evenings after be had pealed his royal robes. Most of his patents related to land, however, and some of the most successful soil in Massachusotts was patented by George.

by George.

He was always trying some scheme to make a pile of money easy, so that he wouldn't have to work; but he died poor and crart at last, in England. He was not very smart, but he attended to business all the time, and did not get up much of a reputation as a moral leper. He said that asking of Great Britain and general superintendent of Cork he did not aim to flake much noise, but he desired to attract uninuch noise, but he desired to attract universal attention by being so moral that he would be regarded as eccentric by other crowned heads.

Massachusetti Progress. 3

(APALI) Massachusetta seems to do more toward getting the country into trouble and out of it than any of her sisters. She gives us the Parties as an offset to that row she got us into with England about a hundred years ago over some tea that was comped in her hurbor. She certainly does well in the stugging and yacht building line, and we think, as go if Americans, that the Puritan is going to distinguish herself. She is handicapped with a name that is enough to hold anything back. A fest Puritan! Were the Puritans in charge of a fairs today they would have the owners of the yacht publicly whipped for indulging in such frivolous practices, and probably burn the boat as a witch.
