THAT WALL STREET NAPOLEON.

Bill Nye Descants on the Financial Ideas of Mr. Ives.

Bill present at the age of twenty may be regarded as the oldest woman on record in the city of Wall Street. This old curiosity on the part of the American people to know how large fortunes are acquired is a local sign, and the desire of the press as well as the people to invest in the parlor magis and funny business by which a man can buy two millions of dollars worth of stock in the Amoria Bonavilla without trying for it, stick a nail in it and infuse the stock to twenty millions, then borrow thirty-five millions on the new stock by booming it.

In the case of Mr. Ives, the gentle, polite failure to remember, the earnest desire not to tell a lie or anything else, the courteous and unobtrusive effort to avoid being too positive about anything that would assist anybody in ascertaining anything—all, all interesting.

The conversation during the investigation of one day ran something like this:
"Mr. Ives, did you in making your assignment turn over all the books connected with your business?"
"No, sir, my ledger, the day book, cash book, ledger, etc., etc."
"Oh?"
"I ask if you turned over all such books on the date of your assignment?"
"I could hardly tell that. At best, I would only swear on information and belief."
"Well, to the best of your knowledge and belief, did you turn over these books at that time?"
"I think I did, but I am not positive as to the date."
"What makes you think you did?"
"Because I did frequently turn the books over, in order to see how they looked on the other side."
"Mr. Ives, we find that several of the more important books connected with your office and the firm of Henry S. Ives & Co. are missing. Do you know where they are?"
"No, I do not."
"Were they in your office prior to your assignment?"
"Oh, yes, they were there, according to the best of my knowledge and belief, up to the time that they were not there."
"Have you any idea, Mr. Ives, where those books are now?"
"No, sir, only in a general way."
"How do you mean in a general way?"
"Well, I mean that I know only in what might be called a general way."
"Well, Mr. Ives, will you state then, in a general way, where those books are now?"
"Yes, sir; they are elsewhere."
"Where, please?"
"Because they are not there."
"Well, now, will you tell us whether you moved these books from the office of H. S. Ives & Co. or not?"
"Do you ask me to answer that question personally?"
"Yes."
"Do you wish a verbal answer or would you rather have it in writing?"
"Answer orally."
"Well, then, I did not, to my knowledge."
"Would you have been apt to know of it if you had taken them away yourself?"
"Well, only in a general way."
"Would you have known about it if any one else had taken them away?"

And you had at an earlier date, a chapter of love in my life.

I have floated far down the river, and yet I can't seem to start.
Little Cupid hit you from his quiver. Has his pigmy phlegmatic old heart.

You inebriated being to doubt it? Well, have to your way if you will. You are right. Ask me no more about it. Enough, that I loved—love her still.

No, she is not a beautiful creature, but she has a beautiful soul.
And its grace, shining out in each feature. Transforms and illumines the whole.

"Why not marry her then? It is clearly a clever folly such feeling to another."
I shall love her for ever sincerely.
But, man, can I marry—my modest?—Judge.

Simple Enough.
Omaha Green—Well, my dear, the wedding day is finished and here we are in our new home.
Bride—But, George, the servant girl who was to be here has not arrived.
"I see. It's too late to hunt up another today. I suppose you can get supper, can't you?"
"Of course. Go out and buy some steak, not too rare, with mushrooms and French potatoes and cold cake and hot waffles, and I'll set the table while you're gone."—Omaha World.

Down on Maw.
A boy was showing "Fate" in a lustrous manner in front of a house on Fourth avenue the other day when a pedestrian hurried up and asked where the fire was.
"Fate's any." "Then what are you yelling for?"
"To get maw to the door. She's just got her hair done up in curl papers, and when she strolls her head out and shows it to the neighbors she'll be mad 'bout it."—Detroit Free Press.

The Example of Washington.
"Remember the example of George Washington, my boy," said the careful father.
"Who was George Washington, papa?" queried the hopeful.
"Why, he was the man who couldn't tell a lie, of course."
"What was the matter with him—couldn't he talk?"
"There was much anxiety in the parental mind as to the youngster's future."—New York Mercury.

Words That Change Meaning.
Bagley—it is passing strange how so many words get twisted from their original meaning. For instance "let" used to mean "hinder."
Mrs. Bagley—I have a better example. "Collect" used to mean "to gather."
Bagley (surprised)—That's what it means now.
Mrs. Bagley (positively)—No, it doesn't. Ask the garbage collectors.—Philadelphia Call.

Lessons of Experience.
Omaha Editor—Anything startling today? News Editor—No, not a single rail-road catastrophe since yesterday.
"Humph!"
"Yes, things are dull now. You see it's between seasons."
"Between seasons?"
"Yes, the summer excursion season is about over and the ear stove season hasn't opened yet."—Omaha World.

The Only Way Now.
Omaha Man—Of all persons! When did you cross the Atlantic, Harry, don't speak so loud. Call me Blinkey.
"Blinkey, eh? Say, George, what means this masquerading?"
"The fact is, Harry, I'm in love with an American girl and am trying to pass myself off for a respectable citizen."—Omaha World.

Pa and the Children.
A small boy, Tommy Peterby, who is one of a family of ten, was in an out in the family carriage with his mother. As they drove past a small cottage of three rooms Mrs. Peterby remarked how pretty it looked.
"Yes, it looks very nice," said Tommy, "and it wouldn't be a bad thing for our family if it were for pa and the children."—Harper's Magazine.

A Brilliant Idea.
"Haven't you missed the theatres this summer?" said one baldheaded man to another.
"I know you are a great admirer of the ballet."
"Yes, I did miss them until a happy thought struck me."
"What was that?"
"I went down to the seashore and took to the bathing beaches."—Washington Critic.

A Natural Inquiry.
"Who'll we put up for congress this year?" asked one local statesman of another.
"General Dasher. He's bound to be elected."
"Can he command the vote?"
"You bet he can; more than any other man in this district."
"How much is he worth?"—Merchant Traveler.

A Passing Cloud.
Omaha Wife (anxiously, desperately, fero-ciously)—John, I found this hair on your coat collar.
Husband—I rode home in a crowded street car.—Omaha World.

The Plainer the Better.
"That is certainly the ugliest pug dog I ever saw," said a husband whose wife had led home a recent purchase.
"Yes, said the lady, rapturously, "what is the tenacity of the dear little fellow."—New York Sun.

Religion as She Is Known.
Teacher—Can anyone help Johnny to finish the fourth commandment?
Small Boy—Yes, ma'am. And the Lord lifted the Thursday and made it a holiday.—Life.

LITTLE LAUGHS.

The plumber is out of Spain, and every body is glad of it.—Merchant Traveler.

The punsters have forgotten today that the oldest woman on record is a lady in Wall Street.—Merchant Traveler.

It is whispered in a New York paper that certain ladies of that city are very fond of playing poker. It is an interesting game, and their husbands are the ones who get beaten in the game.—Chicago Enterprise.

Smith—I hear Mrs. R. has returned from the country. Brown—Yes, she's melancholy days have come, the sadness of the year.—Boston Budget.

It is a singular thing that a man never begins to show his temper until he loses it.—Boston Courier.

"Yes, I'm tired of life. I've about made up my mind to commit suicide. I don't scheme, old fellow; have another yaller."—W. V. Jackson Critic.

An Old Bachelor.
Now, because you are young and romantic, you wonder I have not a wife.
And you had at an earlier date, a chapter of love in my life.

I have floated far down the river, and yet I can't seem to start.
