Oh, dear, dear eye, how about it sight and sense,
White folded hand, at rest; how long since
Can you not give me back one look from heaven
Can you not give me back one look from heaven
Can you not give me back one look from heaven
Can you not give me back one look from heaven
Can you not give me back one look from heaven
Can you not give me back one look from heaven

Only a few months ago, in India, in a certain planting district there was a notorious man enter. Two gentlemen, A and B, residing together on an estate, had been friends of the man for many years, and he had been in the habit of coming to the house and staying in the veranda, within a few days, and the unfortunate man had been actually carried out of the veranda of the bungalow. A and B therefore determined to close themselves like mice, and sit during the night, armed, in the veranda, in the hopes they might be able to get a shot at the man enter, who, they thought, might probably return to the spot which had already provided him with two victims.

"They proceeded to carry out this intention, and sat up till about 2 or 3 o'clock, but nothing happened. A then said he should not stay up any longer, as he did not believe the animal would come; but B announced his intention of waiting half an hour longer by himself. There were large windows opening down to the floor of the veranda, and through one of these A retired, and after entering his room, had just closed the window, and was going out for an instant, when he saw a dark mass land in the veranda, right on to his friend, then heard sounds of a scuffle, and a cry for help. Seizing his rifle, which he kept by his bed, he rushed out, in time to see B walking down the steps that led up to the veranda and the man enter, with his hand in the latter's mouth.

"A was afraid to fire lest he should hit his friend, so, running after him, he, with admirable presence of mind, went up to the tiger, and, plunging his bayonet into the animal's body, at the same instant fired. There was a roar and a scuffle, and B took advantage of the moment to release his hand, and his tiger, after tumbling, died. B's hand was terribly mangled.—Cort Journal.

Giving Her Pet Instructions.
A little Boston maiden of 6 summers has a prize King Charles spaniel, for which a dog tag paid the neat price of $400. The aunt was desirous of entering the dog, and obtaining permission of the girl's parents, she did so. It then became necessary to break the news to the child that for four days she would be separated from her pet. At first she refused to be comforted, answering all arguments and offers of help with a pouting lip and extraneous lamentations; but at length the inevitable seemed to assert itself in the corner of her small brain devoted to philosophy, and upon the theory that what must be must be, she became mollified. She was heard, however, giving very earnest advice to her darling upon the proper manner of conducting himself in this strange show to which he was going, and she laid especial stress upon the company he was to keep there.

"Don't associate with common dogs," she instructed him impressively. "You may work to the contrary, but I don't want your Victoria's dog—and God's dog."—Boston Cor. Providence Journal.

Lit's Chance for the Beginner.
I must say, in all candor, that it is impossible to talk to me as to the syndicate system, the ready plate system, and the growth of exclusiveness and favoritism, that there isn't a fair show for the developer's author. He may sell forth as boldly as ever with a fountain pen, but he cannot get into the arena in which he longs to depart. This exclusiveness has reached such a limit that one or two magazines state that they want nothing that has not been specially ordered. In other words, the writer with an established reputation is solicited to write an article, with the privilege of naming his terms; the writer without a reputation isn't solicited and isn't wanted on any terms, no matter how excellent the article he has to offer. I am speaking of the better fields of literature and not of serial newspapers; for it seems to me they have dropped so far beneath mediocrity that any type can figure in them provided he knows how to be improbable and sensational—"Observer" in Philadelphia Call.

Incident of a Railway Wreck.
Later in the day when I ran upon an old acquaintance turning away from a bulletin board on Washington street with a face as white and drawn as I inquired, with an interest quite apart from the conventional insincerity of the question concerning his health. He was not ill, he asserted me. It was this same horrible story of men and women and boys and girls crushed to death out at a railway. Yet this man, who blanched and trembled almost to fainting at a story of suffering, had inspired his regiment with his own courage under the murderous fire that swept Cemetery Ridge; he had carried borne painful wounds with a gaiety that cheered the whole hospital and had carried the reputation of a man of iron nerve. It is not, in my opinion, a question of nerves, nor yet of self-control, but of that deeper and less readily classified sentiment of sympathetic humanity, which makes the bravest seem weak when in the presence of pain and helplessness, either to relieve it or to combat its cause.—Boston Post.

Vibration of the Ether.
Photography has never reproduced natural colors. Scientists explain this fact by the statement that color has no objective existence. It is simply the brain's interpretation of the rapidly with which the waves of a ray of light beat against the retina. Because our mind registers the sensation of the mind known as violet; beats less rapidly, that known as red and red are nothing but variations of the ether until they reach the optic nerve and communicate to the brain. To photograph color is therefore as impossible as to photograph sound.—Frank Leslie's.

A French Love Draught.
Two women recently went to a grave-digger in rural France and asked him to sell them some human bones, which he did for a good price. The women, who passed in the district for sorceresses, returned home, hiding the bones for a short time, and then burning them and carefully gathering up the cinders; their purpose being to prepare a love draught for a young and pretty country lass, who had ordered it to recognize the heart of a lover who had turned her off.—New York Tribune.

When One is Happy.
When one is happy, one does not seem to go forth into a strange country, but to enter into one's own land. When one is happy, one feels no consciousness of restraint or limitation; in short, when one is happy, what is it but to feel free? I think in the last analysis this is happiness—a sense of freedom.—"A Week Away from Time."

There was recently sold in Paris for $1,100 an eight page manuscript of the first Napoleon. It was a part of a history of Corsica which he wrote in 1790.

Everybody should take the GAZETTE.

UNCLE SAM'S MIDDLES.

The students of this national college are called officially "naval cadets on probation," the traditional title of midshipman having been changed first to cadet midshipman and subsequently—so the engineer pupils might be included—to that now employed. Their number is limited by law to one cadet for every member or delegate of the House of Representatives and to eleven others—seven at large and one from the District of Columbia—appointed by the President. As the age of admission falls between the limits of 14 and 18 and the course extends six years it follows, unfortunately, that in certain districts appointments may not be open more than once in that period, thus making one-third of its boys unavailable by reason of age. The remedy proposed for this is only one of fifty good reasons why the course should be reduced from six to four years.

To pass successfully the candidate must be physically sound and of robust constitution, have a sufficient thorough knowledge of arithmetic, algebra, geometry, English grammar, United States history, reading, writing and spelling, and when appointed, be ready to take an oath to serve for eight years, including the probationary period. When a vacancy is likely to occur in any district, the Secretary of the Navy must notify its Congressional Representative as soon as possible after the 5th of March in each year, and if by the 1st of the following July no action has been taken, the privilege lapses, and the Secretary is empowered to make the nomination. As this system permits the choice of a candidate to be deferred until the May examination is really over, or, as in the majority of cases, until the academic year is about to close, it would seem to be infinitely better if a candidate and an alternate were named at least one year previous to the May examination.

This would enable the applicant to pursue a course specially fitted as a direct preparation for his professional studies and, if successful, to go at once on a cruise, which would teach him definitely his immediate aptitude for a sea life. On the other hand, should the principal fail an alternate stood ready to fill the same office.

The low standard of admission is based upon the theory that the possibilities of the academy must be open so freely to boys of every condition as to make it what is undoubtedly—the most democratic professional school in the world. Practically this very just theory impairs the efficiency of the academy, as it pits the qualifications at a point which rigorously prohibits the energies of the teachers and of the average scholars being directed immediately to the branches of education connected with the naval profession. Entrance examinations are held in May and September.—Harpers Magazine.

A Real Necessity.
We presume there is hardly a lady to be found in our broad land who, if she does not already possess a sewing machine expects some day to become the owner of one. But after the mind has been fully made up to purchase one of these indispensable articles, the question arises to what kind of a machine to buy. It should be so simply constructed that the most inexperienced can see easily operate it. The other points mainly to be considered, and which are the most desirable, are durability, rapidity, capacity for work, ease of operation, regularity of motion, uniformity of tension, and silence while in operation.

The "Light-Running Sewing Machine" fills the above requirements and is said to combine the good points of all sewing machines, with the addition of many new improvements and labor-saving devices. The price is no higher than that of other machines, and every lady who is the happy possessor of one may rest assured she has indeed a treasure. See advertisement. 79-82.
