EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

[T. C. ABBEY, EDITOR.]

We Should Use Common Sense in Judging Our Teachers and Schools.

We demand of our teachers and common schools that they shall do certain prescribed things. We demand that they teach every child in the land to read intelligently, and pleasantly the printed matter contained in books, papers and magazines; that every child be taught to write a good, plain, neat, legible hand; that every child be taught the essentials of arithmetic, i. e., to add, subtract, multiply and divide simple, compound and fractional numbers, to calculate interest with absolute accuracy and a commendable degree of rapidity; that every child be taught the principles of geography, that every child be taught to express its thoughts in a clear, forcible, grammatical language; that be taught the story of our country's history, so that he may be able to gain a plain straight-forward, connected account of that story from the time of Columbus to the present; that every child be taught something of the structure and functions of his bodily organs, and something of the laws of health. In short we demand that our schools shall give to every boy in land a good, sound, practical education, such as will fit it for usefulness and happiness.

We find that not every boy and girl obtains this demanded education, and we are ready to cry out "failure," and to acquiesce when others so cry out. The critics of our common schools take the examination papers or the general scholarship associated in some way of a hundred pupils and then form their estimate of the efficiency of the schools by the scholarship of the blunders of the class.

Nothing else is judged in this way. A horse trainer is not counted a failure in his business because he can not make a Dextre or a Maude S of every colt that is placed in his hands. He is not expected to do it. It is not in the colt therefore it can not be got out. Neither is it in every child to become a finished scholar. The schools can only give the scholar the opportunity to become educated. Whether or not they do this can not be ascertained by basing our judgment upon the failures of their dull pupils.

When a goodly number of bright pupils in a school have learned well the subject required it is fair to presume that the opportunity has been presented to all pupils to learn the same. Were the same common sense used in judging schools and teachers that is used in judging everything else, there would be less adverse criticism, and a higher and more just appreciation of their real mission and of their true worth.
