

GRANGE CLINCHES GRIDIRON FAME

Illinois Football Star Acclaimed the "Greatest Player." Record Shows a Grand Average of 10-Yard Gain Every Time Given the Ball.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR HEPPNER GAZETTE TIMES
By ROBERT FULLER

THIS is a story three weeks overdue. Assigned to your reporter as a possible interesting feature for your perusal it fell by the wayside, the only alibi being this his judgment as to news values was governed by a like thought of some fellow million of his fellow countrymen—that Mr. Grange, Wheaton, Ill., iceman, was not the football player the popeyed rooters of Illinois had been claiming he was.

The evidence was in—and complete in all detail. The famous "redhead" had been smeared and smeared in every start. "Red" Grange's style had been solved. He was through. He was a bust, etc., etc., etc., etc.

But "Red" Grange's hour was coming. Therefore this confession—which, we might pause to mention, is not lonesome because every great sport authority in the big East is now doffing a hat to Grange—frankly and wholeheartedly admitting that he is the greatest football player of the age.

As the whole nation now knows Grange is Coach Bob Zupke's backfield ace on the University of Illinois football team. And it was at Philadelphia against the undefeated Penn team, conquerors of Yale, that "Red" Grange was asked to do his stuff—it was his first Eastern appearance. With 60,000 rooters (mostly critics) looking on.

To make a long story short "Red" Grange was asked to carry the ball just 36 times in that hour of play. He toted it exactly 336 yards—for a nice fat average of a 10-yard gain every time the ball was handed to him. One 56-yard run and 3 touchdowns were included in that performance—giving his team a 24 to 2 victory over the Quaker team which up to an hour before had been the favorites to win.

His Name Immortal

Those are the figure facts of the game which since has had the whole country talking. To tell about "Red" Grange and the football player he is, there isn't space enough in this newspaper to record the feats he does when he feels the pigskin tucked 'neath his elbow and sees charging tacklers bearing down toward him.

Suffice it that all now agree he has everything that any football player ever had—and just a little bit more. That his place on the 1925 all American is assured, goes without saying.

This is Grange's last year at Illinois. He is without doubt the greatest football player the middle west has ever developed. His triumph in the East was a fitting reward. His has not been a path of roses in his climb to fame. Perhaps no player has ever been called upon to do more nor has ever faced a more desperate attack than has "Red" Grange in his last drive to gridiron immortality.

It must be remembered that Grange has been stopped only three times and always it took virtually eleven men to do it. By that, the writer means, that the entire opposing team was out from the first whistle of the game "to stop Grange"—"to get Grange" at all cost. Michigan did it first last year. Nebraska and Iowa this year—and that is all.

Turn to the other side of the ledger and we find how really great he is. We find that the recent Penn game was but a consistent performance with all of his three years at Illinois. Unbelievable as it may seem his record shows that he has the grand average of a 10-yard gain every time given the ball. Not for one game. Not for one season—but for his entire college football career.

Fast of Brain and Foot

Grange's style is speed, a change of pace and a football intuition that is uncanny. He seems to invite tacklers in close to him and then depends upon out-thinking them. A turn—a twist—a mere slight pulling of the hips and he is racing on to out-think—out-step and be free of the next tackler. So he races on through a field of desperate opponents—and it isn't until minutes later that one realizes what a really great performance he has witnessed. The seeming ease—the grace—the exact timing of every move leaves one in open-mouthed wonderment.

Off the football field Grange is a quiet, unassuming American youth, seldom talking football, always agreeable and hardly willing to admit that he can understand why gridiron fans consider his play so remarkable.

He does admit he wanted to "show" the East that the Western game was just as good as that played in the East.

Well—we will tell the cock-eyed world that his wish was gratified.

Labelled "Greatest"

Harold "Red" Grange, Illinois' great football star, lived up to all that had ever been written about him, in his first eastern football appearance. Every gridiron authority who saw him in action declared him to be "the greatest backfield star of the age."

GOOD INTEREST IN MEETINGS.

Rev. Wallace Jones of Lexington announces that the meetings that have been in progress at Pine City during the past two weeks will close on the 25th. The interest in the protracted effort there has been good and Mr. Jones was favored with a splendid hearing. He will begin a meeting at Alpine on Thursday, Nov. 26th, Thanksgiving day, and the cooperation of the people of that community is asked that this meeting may also be a success.
