Dr. Frank Crane Says

BE YOURSELF

A COMMON slang phrase now is "Be yourself!" It is used in various instances. It has a good deal of intelligence in it. Few people object to you when your motives are considered to be sincere and genuine. You are only objectionable when you put on motives that do not belong to you.

The thing people do not like most of all is to have you think that you can deceive them. As long as your actions are genuine and real, they know how to deal with them, but when they are convinced that you are endeavoring to overcome them by trying to borrow words or actions or motives from someone else, they do not like it.

So they tell you to "be yourself."

Of course we cannot express all our emotions of feelings perfectly. There is a certain amount of self-control required by ordinary decency, but at least those feelings that we express should be those that are ours unquestionably and not those we think we should have.

A good many people are sorry for themselves, not because of the hard time they have, but because of the hard time other people think they ought to be having. It is very easy for a preacher or an actor or some such a one to think that he is working hard when everybody says that he is. If he would honestly look at himself and consult his own feelings alone, he would realize that he is not working hard at all.

Self-pity arises from a sort of borrowed notion of ourselves. Oliver Wendell Holmes said that there were several Johns in one person—the man John is, the man John thinks he is, and the man John other people think he is.

If everyone of us could distinguish between the man we are and the man other people think we are, it would do much to facilitate our getting along with each other.

IT IS easy to get the wrong slant on public affairs by a casual reading of newspapers. They publish news and it is usually accurate but it is gathered and handled in such a way that totally wrong impressions are sometimes created. It is necessary to look the whole field over rather carefully if you wish to get the true perspective.

Al Smith's successful race for reelection as governor of New York state on a wet platform was given unlimited publicity. The story of his reelection is entirely true and it expresses the sentiment of New York. There has been no publicity, however, regarding another story on the other side of the issue. That story as related by the Los Angeles Express in an editorial is as follows:

Never before had the people of California expressed themselves so emphatically on the wet and dry issue as they did in last Tuesday's election. The vote to sustain the Wright state enforcement act was the heaviest ever polled in this state against liquor, showing the growing sentiment here for enforcement of prohibition. The heavy vote in fact was a surprise. Few had dared count on such a victory. For months it had been made to appear that wet sentiment was sweeping over the state. In the circumstances the great vote polled on Tuesday in support of the Wright act was doubly gratifying.

It is difficult fully to appreciate the significance of the vote. Early report wired East carried information that California had gone wet by 117,000 or more. The East received that report as if it were what had been expected, and California was at once written down along with New York as definitely wet. But a few hours later the wets of the East, the same as was true here, learned what to them was a dismal and disappointing truth, that California is drier today than ever before in its history. The effort to defeat the Wright act had been defeated, along with the effort to restore gambling.

Credit for this remarkable showing at least, a large measure of the credit—will go to William Gibbs McAdoo, the only man of outstanding prominence in the state who had the courage to take up the leadership of the dry forces against the tremendous wet organization which had been formed to destroy the Wright act.

It was McAdoo whose influence resulted in the democratic party state convention adopting a ringing declaration against any weakening modification of the Volstead act and against the brazen effort to repeal the Wright enforcement act.

It was McAdoo who fired the first gun in the state-wide campaign in defense of the Wright act. Other national and state leaders were invited to participate, but McAdoo was the only conspicuous person who stepped forward and took up the fight. He spoke repeatedly during the campaign in all parts of the state, hurling the charge of nullification directly into the face of wet leaders.

What seemingly had been a hopeless lost cause was galvanized into life and became a great fighting force. California on Tuesday voted by more than 60,000 majority to sustain the Wright act and to proclaim California's position definitely, solidly and permanently in the dry column. It was a wonderful victory.

The California result was a McAdoo triumph and a victory for the law enforcement side. Taking the country as a whole the large eastern states are wet but the south, the midwest and the west are dry, save in spots. This fact is often lost sight of for reasons that may be easily understood. New York is the nation's news center and news reports seem influenced by Gotham's sentiment with a result that we do not always get the correct perspective.

pers and travels half around the world. It has quality called human interest that makes a news story good. It pictures man as victor in his battle with nature.

And it seems to show all the farmer needs to do is walk into his fields and pick up the dollars, that the farm is a gold mine needing only to be promoted and exploited by its owner.

The trouble with such a story is that it makes no mention of the bad years for Aroostock County potato raisers, and there have been several bad years since 1920.

And the farmer knows, too, that he is getting but 83 cents for his dollar when measured against pre-war prices, as is shown in the report of the agricultural department of the federal government. Up to October 15, a decline of 4 per cent in the average of farm-product prices is reported. The price of all farm crops may be shown at 130 with the pre-war prices taken as 100, but still, and he knows it, the farmer gets but 83 cents for his dollar when he steps into the market to buy with it.

Potatoes and Prices.

IN AROOSTOCK County, Me., upon the northeast tip of the United States, they grow their potatoes big.

This year, WALTER CHRISTIE, of Presque Isle, in Aroostock County, produced 154,000 barrels of potatoes on 1,100 acres, which every farmer knows is better than an average crop.

The estimated cost of producing these potatoes is $1.70 a barrel. By selling at $4 a barrel, Mr. Christie apparently stands to clear $354,200, surely not a bad year's work.

Every so often a story of this nature is printed in the newspa-
