

CAMP FOLLOWERS OF PUBLIC HEALTH

From time immemorial armies were followed by men and women who catered to the baser appetites of soldiers. These camp followers added nothing to the comfort and well-being of the armies; instead they were always a prolific source of trouble and of disease.

In its fight against disease the vast army of public health workers have also been followed by men and women who, in their parasitic activities, resemble the camp followers of old.

These modern camp followers know little or nothing of the anatomy of the human body, have not even a nodding acquaintance with the medical sciences, and yet they profess to cure all ailments, acute or chronic, infectious or non-infectious.

Deaths from cancer in Oregon in 1925 totaled 931; deaths from organic heart trouble, 1487. How many of these deaths were hastened by the camp followers of medicine it is hard to estimate.

The camp followers of public health can be exterminated. Educated public opinion can do it.

State Market Agent Writes About Poultry

Since 1880 the poultry industry of this country has grown four-fold, while the population has only a little more than doubled.

Past records show that when almost any business is profitable, thousand go into that business and stay in it until the limit of consumption is reached, then drop out as prices and profits fall.

More and more the fact is forced onto us that this country cannot long maintain its present high standard of living unless production is largely limited to the country's needs.

What's a Pig Worth? At weaning time a pig is worth a little less than one-third of the price of a 200-pound hog. If hogs are $12 a hundred a good pig should be valued at from $7 to $8.

Fighting to Force Prices.

The cotton growers of the south are fighting to hold back bales already grown and pledge planters to curtail production 25 per cent in the future.

On the other hand city consumers say that present farm products come to them at so high prices that consumption has to be restricted to necessities, and they ask what will happen if farmers restrict their crop yields to the point of forcing higher prices?

Organization will come some day when necessity forces hard enough.
