tablishing a goal for which he is aiming and allowing his associates to decide on the methods of approach or the means of accomplishment. This has been made clearly evident in his stand on the matter of tax reduction. Having in mind the extraordinary surplus which now exists in the United States Treasury, he decided that a primary obligation rested on the government to restore this money collected in the form of taxes to the people who paid it, on the grounds that having overcharged them for their government, they were entitled to directly profit by reason of the economies which have reduced the cost of government. He accordingly suggested at first hand, that this surplus be distributed in the form of a cash rebate to the taxpavers, expressing the hope that the payment might be made before the first of

THE WORLD GOES ON

SCIENTIST tells us that the world will not end for at least A 999,998,000,000,000 years.

So it appears that there will be time for a number of generatoins to carry on the accumulated knowledge and folly of their fathers and to make experiments of their own-the sum of which process is known as progress.

Whether the scientific gentlemen may be mistaken a few months one way or the other does not much matter.

The importance of the statement lies in its psychological The idea that the world will spin on, bearing countless generations of changing men, is in itself a stimulating one. The old conception of a world that would end in a few years was a paralyzing one. If the world would surely end in a short time, men of former times asked themselves, why keep any accurate record of history? Why carry on extensive scientific experiments? Why bother about changing social conditions greatly? Why begin long-time projects of improvement when there would be no time to complete them?

The idea that the world will go on, to all practical purposes, forever, tends to turn men's minds to the problems of making it a better place to live in.

It will force them to face the problems of getting along amicably with one another, which means the elimination of war.

It will force them to turn their attention toward the combatting of disease and the installing of new sanitary improvements to safeguard health. The same scientist says the earth has been in existence about two trillion years, or something like one five hundred thousandth of the length of time it will continue beyond us. This makes us realize that civilization is just beginning, that mankind is taking the first faltering steps on a long career. It mitigates the despair occasioned by the child-mindedness of the crowd, the lack of progress in mankind and the insanity of the late war. The idea that the world will continue indefinitely is humbling, stimulating and encouraging.

It may inspire awe, but it will never stifle into stagnation as did the conception of the world as a temporary thing in which the end was eternally imminent.
