

COUNTY SERVICE HEALTH BILL UP

purchaseable. No expenditure of public funds brings greater return to the state and its people than the money used for the promotion of public health. Prevention of disease is cheaper than its cure or long extended care and support.

The unit for public health work should be the county with a full-time qualified public health officer who should be made responsible for the conduct of local health matters within its jurisdiction with only such supervision as the state may be required to give in an advisory capacity. Five such organizations have been operating in the State of Oregon for the past two years, and with the very best results in promoting the physical welfare of the inhabitants. Other states have made notable progress in county health administration, and there are now more than 250 such organizations throughout the country.

The expenditures for a full-time service are relatively small as compared with the value of the results obtained. In most communities an expenditure of about fifty cents per capita would provide adequately for the control of communicable diseases. Good Health Work pays and the investment is one that should be made by all communities. An outlay of a relatively small sum for health work in the South has made it possible for agriculture to take on a new lease of life. North Carolina is a good example of what can be done by improving the health of the rural population.

An act for providing state aid for rural counties has been proposed and will be submitted to the present legislature. Under this act counties which establish a full-time county health organization may receive from the state one-half of the amount appropriated by the county court up to $2,500. This need not be an expensive service, and in some cases counties are expending sums in excess of what it would take to operate a full-time unit. That the tide of public health conscience is rising higher and higher in Oregon is indicated by the fact that five counties have maintained full-time health units during the past two years. The people of these counties are confidently looking to the legislature to assist them in maintaining full-time health units. Five years ago we did not have a single full-time county health officer. It is believed that at least seven more counties will make appropriations for full-time units if the state will make provisions to assist in this work. The International Health Board will assist until this demonstration is made. The state should, however, continue its share in the expense as the general health is dependent on the efficiency of the local departments. In order to maintain this efficiency it is essential that the state exercise careful supervision over these units. This is only possible when the state shares in the cost of maintaining these units.

The economic loss from six of the most important communicable diseases in the state of Oregon is as follows:

1924-1925.	Cases	Deaths	Amt.
Typhoid fever	478	82	$ 649,000
Diphtheria	2774	208	1,317,400
Scarlet fever	2517	35	428,700
Whoop, Cough	1083	76	407,075

Measles 5445 83 551,125
Smallpox 1694 5 194,400

For a comparison in estimating economic loss, the following values have been used:

Deaths, $5,000.
Typhoid fever cases, $500.
Diphtheria cases, $100.
Scarlet fever cases, $100.
Smallpox cases, $100.
Whooping cough cases, $25.
Measles, $25.

ALL SAINTS' EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Rev. Stanley Moore, Minister.
Sunday School at 9:45.
Morning Service at 11 o'clock.
Everybody welcome.

The Rt. Rev. Edward M. Cross, bishop of Spokane, will conduct the evening service. Services will begin at 7:30 o'clock.

Rev. Cross comes to us as our visiting Crusader in the "Bishop's Crusade," a great religious movement that is going on in the Episcopal church all over the United States. It is a movement back to Christ and not to Churchism, and all denominations are participating in this effort. We all know about the great Christian Crusades against the Mohammedans that stirred all Europe from the year 1095 to the close of the twelfth century. Those men went forth to win back the Holy Land from the Mohammedans. Today these Christian Crusaders, our bishops, are seeking to win a stronger, loftier love of Christ in the hearts of men and women and boys and girls who already are Christians or who want to walk in Christ's way from henceforth. The object of the Crusade is to lift the whole level of our life to a higher plane, to re-enlist and reconsecrate our lives under the banner of Christ, our leader. It is easy enough to stir people to exceptional effort for a period of a week or two weeks. That is exactly what we want to avoid.

Our desire is to set a new pace that will be continued year in and year out. In many instances, it will call for a thoroughgoing moral conversion on the part of those participating. In other instances, it will mean a completely new spiritual outlook. In still others, it will mean a broadening of moral, spiritual and social horizons. Therefore, the crusaders must avoid anything that will tend to merely momentary emotion and must place all that they do upon a solid foundation, such as will endure the test of time and experience.

"Today, there is a great breach between our professions as Christians and our practice. We are so accustomed to use idealistic language that it has lost its force, in that we do not square our lives, or even attempt to square our lives, with the lofty expressions of the ideal. Creed and character are so closely wrought that one cannot live without the other. Sunday religion is altogether too prominent in our religious life. While business ethics are improving, the Christian man must deliberately set himself to discover what is the Christian way of life in business. The politician must find out what is the Christian walk of life in his political responsibilities. So with the professional man. The citizen, in all his relations with the nation, must bring to bear the teaching of Christ on his conception of his own nation and its relations to other nations. This is equally true relative to our domestic affairs."

Come out to this service and join with us in our prayer and praise and reconsecration.
