

WATER SUPPLIES AND TYPHOID

Chief of the Drys

Seymour Lowman of New York who has just taken over Gen. Andrew's job of national prohibition enforcement.

From State Board of Health. A recent epidemic of typhoid fever in a small city of eastern Oregon was caused by a break in a defective pipe-line. This should serve as a warning to city officials throughout this state to take immediate steps to survey their water systems and make such changes as will insure safe water for the communities which they serve. It is the sworn duty of every city official to guard the health of the community and in doing this he must see that the people have a safe water supply. When the public water supplies are not properly protected, we are likely to find typhoid fever prevalent. Water-borne typhoid is absolutely preventable and therefore absolutely inexcusable.

City water supplies can be rendered safe by chemical purification and filtration. By these methods, any community can assure itself of a safe water supply at a very moderate cost. For the small village using a naturally stored supply the essential safeguard of chlorination is due to primitive methods of sanitation and sewage disposal. This danger is easy to understand for typhoid fever is an intestinal disease and countless millions of germs are present in the excretion of patients and carriers. From the excretions the germs may be carried either directly or indirectly by flies, fingers, etc., to food, water or milk, which if consumed, may cause typhoid fever. Finally for those who live or travel in regions where sanitation is still primitive, immunization by the use of anti-typhoid vaccine, is a process which repeated every five years will, in the vast majority of instances, protect against infection with this disease.

Purification of water supplies, pasteurization of milk supplies and the use of typhoid vaccine have done much to reduce the incidence of typhoid, and when generally applied to every community in this state will make it possible to eradicate typhoid fever which now costs the state about $340,000 annually.

More Men Than Women "Flunked" Out at U. O.

University of Oregon, Eugene, June 27.—One hundred forty-nine students "flunked" out of the University of Oregon during the school year 1926-27, it was revealed in figures announced today at the registrar's office. A weeding process of the first two terms of the year had so reduced the number of academic laggards that in the spring term just ended the "flunkers" numbered less than half those of the fall term.

Spring term flunks numbered 39—25 men and 14 women. Seventeen men and one woman failed to make the five hours required for freshmen or seven hours required for members of the three upper classes. Five men and three women were dropped under the 17-hour rule imposed on probationers, and three men and one woman were flunked because of failure to meet special requirements imposed by the scholastic committee in their individual cases.

The year's figures show a decided advantage for women students. Of the 149 who flunked out, there were 124 men and 25 women. This ratio was approximated in each of the terms. Illustrating the drop in the number of flunks as the year progressed, the following figures are given: Fall term, 65 flunks; winter term 65; spring term, 30.

MURDER CHARGES TO REMAIN.

Despite the fact that the De Autremont brothers, Roy, Ray and Hugh, have been sent to prison for life after they confessed to holding up a Southern Pacific train on the Shasta division four years ago, they still have three additional charges of murder hanging over their heads and also a federal charge of mail and train robbery, which will never be dismissed. In the opinion of Charles Ridgford, United States postal inspector for the Northwest district with headquarters in Spokane.

PREPARED FOR FIRES.

Although 33 forest fires have been reported in national forests in the northwest this season, Umatilla forest still has a clean record, according to the reports received from the Portland district office. John G. Clouston, central dispatcher for the Umatilla district, will move from Pendleton to Kamela tomorrow to make his headquarters during the season of fire hazard. Mr. Clouston will direct all fire fighting from his station at Kamela.—East Oregonian.
