WHEAT MARKET EXCITED.
The eastern wheat markets became very much excited Monday when freezing weather was reported over a large area in Canada, and there was a raise of six cents a bushel through the day. The Portland market did not go quite so high, but there was an advance of one to three cents over Saturday. Portland quotations were $1.27 to $1.32. Much of the wheat in the northwest this year is lacking in protein and not up to standard for milling purposes, but will be sold for export.

The grain inspection department under the State Market Agent's office at Portland handled some 800 carloads of wheat Monday and expects an average of 200 carloads a day during the next three months.
