Songs of Plain Folks

The Tramp

By James Lewis Hays

Our country roads remember
The "walking delegates"
Who, May-time till November,
Inspected their estates,—
The gentlemen of leisure
Whose raiment oft displayed
Marks of the vast displeasure
Of bulldogs unafraid.

And farmers' wives remember
Bold connoisseurs of pie
Who viewed bucksaw and timber
With a distrustful eye.
Now that the sun is setting
On this delightful scamp,
Will they soon be regretting
The passing of the tramp?

The old time tramp whose arrow
Was chalked on friendly gates
Was jolly, not a narrow,
Soured railer at the fates.
A harmless sort of sinner
Who often sang a song,
All that he asked was dinner
And a chance to move along.
