

Local Happenings

Joseph Eskelson, after having spent some three months at the old home in Lexington, helping some of the time with the weeding and seeding on the Eskelson farm, is now preparing to return to his home in Salem where he will be for the winter at least. It is hard for Joe to get weaned away from Morrow county and he spends much of his time up this way. It has seemed more like home than ever this fall, because of the abundant showers—really more rain than he is used to at this season in the Salem country. As it had rained much of the time Mr. Eskelson was here, he feels that the people of the county should vote him a pension as a rain producer, feeling sure that it was his influence that brought about this condition. According to latest reports, however, no one has made a move in this direction, so Joe will have to try and get along in the same old way. Mr. Eskelson was a visitor here Wednesday, and is leaving for Salem Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Vawter Crawford and daughter, Miss Mary Crawford, returned on Tuesday from a visit with relatives at Joseph over the week end. The particular occasion for this visit was to get acquainted with Master Leland Crawford Hayes, a recent arrival at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Everett O. Hayes, whom they found to be coming along fine.

• Armistice Day •

WE Pause Today upon the threshold of this solemn occasion to bow down our heads before the tomb of him who typifies the thousands who have suffered that the world may live again in peace.

It must not be said that we have forgotten the blood they have shed, nor that we are wanting in appreciation of the ideals for which they fought.

It behooves this Nation to love and cherish through the long, dim years of the future the memory of those who suffered their young lives to be extinguished in the cause of world democracy and lasting peace.

We hope that God may give to the nations of the earth the vision to see, and the will to execute for all time—a glorious, lasting PEACE.

FARM REMINDERS.

Plow bottoms will rust in damp Oregon weather if it is put away without protection. Some farmers secure this protection by smearing paint on the bottom and taking it off in the spring with a strong lye solution. Others use axle grease. Careful farmers also grease the binder knottes and similar parts when they put their machinery in the implement shed. They also remove belts and canvases as these would either stretch during the winter or injure the machinery. Carrots are fed to laying hens by many successful Oregon poultrymen. They are high in vitamins and tend to keep the hens busy. The general practice is to hang the carrots about the chicken house at the proper height.

Fall grain in Oregon sown late is done at a thicker rate in order to make up for lack of stooling. Wheat is sowed at not less than two bushels and oats at not less than three bushels per acre. Deep sowing at this time is likely to cause rotting of the seed as the soil is getting rather cold and wet, advises the experiment station.

All old alfalfa meadows in Oregon are best fed or clipped off before the winter sets in. They can be renovated and sown to grain crops the latter siding in, keeping down the grass in the winter, also making the first cutting next season larger.

Camel

Made for one purpose
—to promote pleasure

Camel is attuned to the mood of the smoker who seeks pleasures rather than panaceas. Offered as a cheer not as a cure.

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.
