There's Too Much Concentration At Times SIR OLIVER LODGE the other day said: "Science pursues a narrow road in search of truth, looking neither to the right nor the left."

Some of the most important things of life come unexpectedly. Some of our most vital events are not those toward which we labored.

A man should keep his eyes and be able to see things "out of the tail of his eye."

It is all right to pursue one subject with concentration, but we should not concentrate so much that we do not see other things.

Many a man has been so busy with his trade or calling that he has failed to recognize opportunities that thrust themselves upon him.

Let us devote all our attention to our business in hand, but let us remember that there are other things in this world than the thing upon which we have set our heart...

Originally, nitrogen was extracted from the atmosphere by what was known as the arc process. It required a great deal of cheap power.

Private parties in our own country, using nitrogen for commercial purposes, have, since the war, constructed a number of comparatively large plants for the extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere...

Population Crowded—Don't Worry.

THE REV. G. A. S. KENNEDY of England says, "Britain stopping famines and plagues in India has sent the population from one hundred to three hundred millions."

Lord Esher says there were only 850,000,000 people on earth in 1800. Today there are about 1,800,000,000.

To begin with, Texas could feed the 1,800,000,000 people now on earth, under intensive cultivation.

With this knowledge no efficient government or private corporation would think of using water power for the purpose of extracting nitrogen from the air.

When the war ended scientists learned what the Germans knew and which they had greatly improved during the war, and it was then possible to construct a plant along more modern lines.
