

Pasteurization of Milk.

From State Board of Health.

Few modern public health measures have so completely won the confidence of sanitarians as the pasteurization of milk. The public health laboratory worker has satisfied himself that in a properly constructed and operated pasteurizing machine the ordinary pathogenic germs at all likely to be found in milk, including the tubercle bacillus, are surely destroyed. The practical health official has observed that, since the general introduction of pasteurization, there has been an almost entire disappearance of typhoid, septic sore throat, scarlet fever and diphtheria due to milk-borne infection. At present there is hardly any milk-borne disease in the United States save in the smaller towns and rural districts still using raw milk. The relatively insignificant number of milk-borne outbreaks in large cities in the present time has been without exception traced to that small fraction of the total milk supply that is delivered in the raw state.

During the past few months the experience with raw milk in Montreal has forcibly recalled the dangerous condition from which the whole country has recently emerged. Some sanitary authorities have been tempted to regard the recent amazing decline in typhoid in large cities as due to the improvement in water supply that has been brought about through chlorination and filtration; there is no gainsaying that this has been an important factor. It must be remembered, however, that an improvement in the milk supply has been going on over this period and that both reforms must be given large credit for the reduction of disease. It is not possible to determine, and from a practical standpoint it is not significant, precisely how the credit should be apportioned.

The early prejudice among nutritional experts against pasteurized milk has largely melted away. Proper pasteurization does not injuriously affect the taste, appearance or digestibility; on the contrary, the tendency of heat to make the curds smaller is perhaps an aid to digestion. Some observers at one time were inclined to lay stress on the undoubted diminution in the antiscorbutic vitamins that is caused by heating. At the present day this gives little concern since the inclusion—now usual—in the infant's dietary of orange or tomato juice entirely meets this objection.

On the whole, modern well controlled pasteurization marks a distinct sanitary advance. While not an unmixed benefit, as witnessed in the increased cost of milk and the consequent tendency of the consumer to restrict this valuable article of diet, pasteurization undoubtedly prevents a large amount of infectious disease among both adults and children. It is impossible to assign to any health measure a precise share in bringing about the great reduction in infant mortality that has occurred in this country in the last fifteen years; but there is no doubt that the part played by pasteurization has been important.—A. M. A.
