

ALFALFA NEMATODE ON WILLOW CREEK

growth. A single swollen stem or sprout ... may contain hundreds of nematodes, each deriving its food from the plant.

This nematode is distinctly different from the one which causes root-knot in a wide variety of plants and abnormal swellings on potatoes and other tuberous crops.

The organisms may be carried long distances by irrigation water or by hay. Waste water from infested fields carries the organisms by the millions.

Manner of Spread. The organisms may be carried long distances by irrigation water or by hay. Waste water from infested fields carries the organisms by the millions.

The spread over shorter distances may be accomplished by farm implements, which probably play a great part in carrying infection to all parts of a farm from small centers of infection, or by animals, birds, man, or wind, any one of which may carry a bit of soil or mud or bits of diseased plants containing many nematodes or their eggs.

Means of Control. In this case an ounce of prevention is worth a ton of cure. It is worth any effort to prevent the infection from occurring. Avoiding the various means of spread mentioned above is one way to do this.
