

FARM MARKET TREND

Corvallis, Ore., July 30.—BREAD GRAIN—The general tone of the wheat and rye markets was weaker again last week. The movement of hard red winter continued very heavy and spring wheat prospects were generally quite favorable. Premiums were paid for dry grain suitable for milling. Soft red winter wheat did not follow the decline in hard winter. Soft red winter was quoted from $1.50 to $1.55 in central markets. Latest official information indicates a world bread grain supply probably a little smaller in 1928-29 than for the year just past.

FRED GRAIN—Corn markets held steady but barley and oats declined sharply. The prospect for larger and earlier crops of barley abroad as well as in the United States was a weakening factor, although demand for feed grains has been keen because of scarcity of old stocks.

HAY, PASTURE AND FEEDS—Seasonal dullness with prices moving toward a new crop basis characterized the hay markets. Supplies of top grade alfalfa have been limited but much damaged hay is offered. Statistically, the hay situation is much firmer than a year ago. Feeds in general were also lower because of seasonal influences and fair pastures throughout the country generally. Milling of alfalfa increased in July well above previous months and exceeded July, 1927 by 13,000 tons.

DAIRY PRODUCTS—The San Francisco butter market ruled firm last week with 92 score bringing 46 cents. Prices on the Coast are about four cents higher than a year ago and stocks in storage are about 1,500,000 pounds less. Eastern markets were barely steady and trade was slow. Prices are higher there also but storage stocks accumulated more rapidly last week than a year ago which tended to reduce the storage shortage. Production is probably about equal to a year ago.

LIVESTOCK—Fat lambs declined again last week in leading market and grassy killer cattle were lower. Well finished cattle were steady and hogs advanced on curtailed shipments following previous price declines.

WOOL AND MOHAIR—A little more activity in domestic markets with fine wool in better demand, but somewhat lower prices in England featured last week's wool market reports. Mohair was quiet.

FRUIT—The dried prune markets are reported slow, with buyers in Europe assuming a waiting attitude and contending that quotations are now too high in view of stocks on hand, the supply of fresh fruit, and lower quotations on Yugoslavian prunes. Official advices however indicate that stocks are not excessive and that there may be some improvement in the situation if European dealers become convinced that prices will not be lowered in the United States.
