

Reading, Drama, Music Aids to the Higher Life

By Dr. Henry Davidson Sheldon, Dean of the School of Education, University of Oregon.

One of the great problems of modern life is the proper use of leisure time. We frequently see quite successful men and women who are no longer compelled to earn a living, who have achieved affluence, and are at the same time bored. The fast night life of our large towns and cities is the result of this state of affairs. How can the schools help to train the next generation for higher types of enjoyment?

1. There is the resource of reading. Not only in biographies, novels, and books of travel do we have a sure refuge against boredom, but also in genuine lore of poetry and higher literature is to be found one of the most elevating forces in life. The good modern teacher by reading appropriate selections of verse aloud, by calling attention to suitable books of adventure and to stimulating biographies, performs great service in the direction of character building. Nowadays all our towns have good public libraries. What the school can furnish is direction and motivation.

2. Another source of intelligent enjoyment is to be found in the drama. "Little Theatres" have arisen by the thousand all over the country where intelligent amateurs frequently put on plays of a high degree of merit. The school through its dramatic club and the study of plays in its English department can be doing much to make the drama a great positive and constructive force in a creative way. Certainly no better use of leisure can be imagined than in connection with a play which grips the emotions and sets us thinking.

3. Most powerful of all the arts is music. Its roots are deep in our emotions. It cheers us when we are sad and forms a fitting expression of joy in the hour of success. Yet proper music requires technical training. In the work of the schools the glee clubs, orchestras, and choruses lay the foundation of one of the most pleasant and vital modes of occupying leisure time.

Thus we see that the school can be and to a large extent is at the present time a great moral resource in building up the lives of young people. We of the older generation can promote this great work by seeing that the libraries are properly supplied with books, that the teachers of drama have proper facilities for performing good plays, and that sufficient time and setting be given to the musical interests.

New Settlers Making Investments in Oregon

A statement showing nearly a half million dollars invested by new settlers attracted to this state through the work of the Oregon State Chamber of Commerce is revealed in the October report made recently by W. G. Ide, manager. The exact amount is $429,700 invested during October by the newcomers.

New settlers in the state purchased 3230 acres of land. Letters were received from 1065 families during the month and 41 actually located in the state. Letters were received from 73 families stating they had decided to move to Oregon and they would have $171,700 to invest. The extent of the correspondence carried on by the state chamber in its work of attracting new settlers for Oregon can be gained from the fact that 2976 letters were mailed from the office. In addition to this were 825 packages of literature dealing with all sections of Oregon which prospective settlers had requested.

Mr. Ide further notes that inquiries about Oregon are increasing, particularly at this season of the year when the cold winters are beginning to set in back east. Farm conditions generally in Oregon have been fairly prosperous during the past season with the many other advantages the state will continue to attract new folks.

Bert Kane departed for Portland on Tuesday where he will enter a hospital in preparation for an operation of bone grafting he will undergo in a few weeks at the hands of Dr. Alken. Mr. Kane, who was so terribly smashed up in an accident some two years ago this fall, when he was caught in a tractor, has never fully recovered, and his injured arm does not heal. It is expected that the bone grafting will restore his arm to something like a normal condition.

County Agent C. W. Smith departed for Portland on Friday and will spend the time at the International Stock show, having charge of one division of the great exposition.

A few tips about curtains. In general, overcurtains should hang to the floor, undercurtains to the window sill, and straight draperies should be weighted to keep them from billowing out into the room.

Bands of self material finished with a tailored rosette are always appropriate for tie-backs. Usually, when a valance is used, it is best to have it only slightly shaped, not cut out in sharp points or scallops. Full curtains are very effective when simply French pleated at the top and used without a valance or cornice treatment.

Curtains for French doors should always be shirred at both top and bottom and stretched tightly on round or flat rods. Opaque glass curtains hung on a traverse cord eliminate the need for window shades.

THE LAST OF THE DUANES
by Zane Grey

Starting This Week

ONE of the greatest romances written by America's most beloved Western author!

Zane Grey, born at Zanesville O., in 1875, has met with unprecedented success since beginning his literary career in 1905. His books sell in the hundreds of thousands—his admirers are legion.

That is because he gets the feel of the West in his stories—not only that, he knows the inside of human nature. He is superb in the treatment of love stories—there's a great, human on in "The Last of the Duanes."

Among the Zane Grey books that have been read and lauded all over the world are "The Spirit of the Border," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "Desert Gold," "The Lone Star Ranger," "The Desert of Wheat," and many others. "The Last of the Duanes," lives up to his reputation.
