For every look of marble holds a Venus, With nothing but unchisel'd stone between us.

—DAWE'S GERALDINE.

I believe that the woman who learns to recognize the early signs of age has a splendid weapon against their inroads. Any phusician will tell you that pain is a warning of something radically wrong with the internal machine. Heed that first warning, take active steps to find out and correct whatever has gone out of order, and you can save yourself many hours of illness and misery.

I really wish, for the sake of your good looks, that there were some kindred way of warning when youth is slipping by. Unfortunately there isn't, and all too often the lines and relaxation of premature ageing have left their mark before one single step has been taken to prevent the catastrophe and preserve the beauty that is every woman's most precious possession.

Do not wait for the day when a painfully frank mirror warns you that youth is past. Take regular, daily care of your skin. It is little enough to do when the object to be attained is so infinitely worth while. Guard against the mistakes of youth. Never forget that the prerequisites of beauty are, first, a clear skin; second, a stimulated skin, and lastly, a protected skin. Twice a day is not too often to cleanse your face with either cleansing or massage cream, should the tissues be dry and sensitive; or with a pasteurized face cream, should they be normal, oily or undernourished.

Watch for the first lines that creep around the eyes. They are danger signals! Watch for the downward droop at the corners of your mouth. It signifies relaxation, the worst enemy of beauty! And whether the signs are faint or unmistakable, remember that stimulation is the only sane, scientific corrective measure.

So take out your little bottle of skin-toning lotion and with a tiny pad of cotton and a few drops of the liquid, go swiftly over the neglected areas. The skin tingles in quick response, and you have to some extent "doctored" your complexion against the inroads of age. Watch for the danger signals, apply first aid—and your good looks will be unimpaired for many years!
