FISH AND GAME Activities

It is no uncommon occurrence for travelers along the Roosevelt highway to see anywhere from one to a hundred elk when they pass between Seaside and Cannon Beach according to the State Game Commission. Several years ago 49,000 acres of logged off land near and on Tillamook Head was set aside for a game preserve. Since that time a small herd of elk has increased to more than 500 and there has been an even greater increase of deer on the big tract.

Deputy Game Warden Charles Smith, whose district is Clatsop county, notified Harold Clifford, state game warden, a few days ago that he saw 70 elk in one herd grazing near the highway, and that this band constituted but a small part of the animals to be found in the preserve.

Co-operation between Clatsop county sportsmen, employees of the Crown Willamette company, which owns the land on the preserve, and the Game Commission has prevented an unlawful slaughter of the elk. The measures of protection extended to the elk has increased all other types of game in the preserve. Deputy Warden Smith reports that on one trip along the Roosevelt highway he saw six different kinds of game.

More than fifty cougar have been killed by hunters in Oregon since the first of the year and this has been responsible for the saving of many hundred deer, according to the State Game Commission. Up to February 15, the commission had paid bounties of $25 each on 48 cougar and several hunters had not reported in to collect their payments.

The extreme cold weather in the mountains has driven the deer to lower levels and the cougar have followed them, thus making themselves the prey to hunters. Game law violators have taken advantage of the elements that have brought the deer nearer civilization and have kept wardens on the alert for killers.

War has been declared by the State Game Commission on the fishermen of the Rogue river who, contrary to law, are said to be catching and selling steelheads. Two wardens, after making careful plans, a few days ago took a dozen nets from the lower Rogue river, and are now keeping observant eyes on the stream to catch the law violators.

Your beauty's a flower, in the morning that blows And withers the faster, the faster it grows.

Earlier in the month, in speaking of the different types of skin, I likened the thin skin to a piece of fine silk. I also told you that the thin skin possesses a transparent delicacy and a clear inner tone, and that the lack of natural oil in the system of the thin-skinned woman makes the pore structure less apparent.

This is the type of skin that really requires the greatest amount of care. And it is more delicate in texture and does not have the resistance of the heavier or thicker skin which can more easily throw off the effects of the elements. The thin or dry skin will chap, redden, and peel much more quickly than one that is thick or oily.

Therefore, in the daily care of such a skin it is very important to use preparations that will replace some of the oil which is lacking naturally. And for that reason, I advocate only the occasional use of water for cleansing the dry skin. After the extreme dry condition has been corrected by frequent applications of rich feeding creams that will help to build up the starved skin texture, water can be used more frequently, but not daily. The action of water on the dry skin is to dry still further any of the natural oil that might remain in the skin, and make the skin more arid, so to speak. Whereas the frequent application of rich, nourishing and feeding creams will give the skin some of the oils that it lacks naturally.

The essential steps to beauty for the dry skin are: Cleansing, stimulating, nourishing and toning.

The cleansing should consist of an application of good cleansing cream worked in lightly with the finger tips. Be sure in applying your creams not to stretch or pull the skin, but work them in gently.

The stimulation should consist of a mild stimulation lotion that will whip up the circulation and bring the blood to the surface. The nourishment should be in the form of a feeding massage cream, rich in consistency.

Your daily beauty treatment should be finished with the application of a skin-toning lotion that is especially prepared for dry skins, and which is only slightly astringent, as the majority of women who possess thin skins do not have a great amount of fleshy tissue.

Those who have dry skins should give very special attention to the flesh surrounding the eyes, as this oftentimes is more dry than the rest of the face, and unless it is fed generously with a rich anti-wrinkle cream (if possible left on overnight), you will soon see the approach of fine lines and wrinkles both below and at the sides of the eyes.
