

ONION SEED SELECTION.

(College News Service, O. S. A. C.) Those who contemplate growing onions commercially in 1929, particularly for fall and winter storage, would do well to bear in mind that the solidity and keeping qualities of the bulbs are largely dependent upon the hereditary characteristics transmitted in the seed strains. Variety, usually Yellow Danvers, is by no means sufficient to warrant a desirable crop, but the selection and pedigree of seed is important. One reason for Oregon onions being so favorably known on the market, in fact, is due to the years of selection and breeding of seed stock which commercial growers have carried on, says the vegetable gardening department of Oregon State college.

FERTILIZE IRRIGATED LAND.

(College News Service, O. S. A. C.) A survey of Oregon vegetable growing conditions indicates that those growers who have facilities for irrigation are the more extensive users of both manure and commercial fertilizers. Water artificially applied promotes rapid breaking down or rotting of the manure, and the commercial fertilizer can be rendered more quickly available for the use of the plants by having the water dissolve the chemical materials. Vegetable land which is irrigated is also more intensively farmed and therefore needs a greater amount of fertilizer, says the experiment station.

It Costs 4 Times as Much to transport a kilowatt-hour of electricity to the light switch on your walls as it costs to make it in the power house. Keeping down the cost of distribution, is, therefore, one of the biggest problems of the light and power company. To keep down this cost, millions of dollars have been spent in the research laboratories of the electrical industry on studies of the loss of electricity through leakage, the technique of constructing underground cables, improvements in insulators and transformers and the accuracy of meters. Bookkeeping, meter reading, bill collecting, are other items entering into the cost of giving service. Improvements in the art of generating and distributing electricity are in the interest of the consumer and the company by reducing the cost and increasing consumption.

What Are You Selling? People do not object to paying for credit accommodations—just as they expect to pay less for cash. They are particular about quality, and do not object to paying for it. Some stores operate on the idea of selling for less, making primarily a price appeal; others stress service and credit accommodations. Every store has goods on its shelves for sale, and most everyone knows it; but the merchant who succeeds is not selling merchandise—he is selling an IDEA.
