WHAT OF THE FARMER?

Daily Journal of Commerce (Portland)

"HOW'S BUSINESS?" That's the question of the hour.

It must be good in England, for a seven-year-old youngster has one of the two numbers of the Derby favorite, and if the horse wins the boy is in line for a win of $625,000.

But that's a different kind of business. Over here, if the farmer does well business picks up and carries along better.

The farmer is hopeful of relief. We are not sure what that relief is going to be or how it is going to get to him, but we will wager the usual dollar to the usual doughnut that it won't come to him in the form or in the quantity that will satisfy him, and if the farmer isn't satisfied business generally is not going to be fully satisfied.

The farmer's curious difficulty is that he can't buy food enough to feed his family because he himself is producing too much food. There are a dozen other angles to his problem, some of them serious; but the chief cause of agricultural poverty is over-production.

The farmer produces more staple products than the country needs. When he sends his produce to the market, they are at the mercy of the buyer—a perfectly sound example of the good old law of supply and demand. He must sell his goods in a market which the buyer controls, and he must buy his necessities in markets which the vendors control. The object of farm-relief legislation is to set up certain obstacles to the free working of the law of supply and demand.

The natural remedy for the farmer's difficulty would, of course, be to limit production. Mr. Hoover was once rash enough to say just that thing, in the course of a public speech, and during the late campaign the fiery Mr. Smith sought to make Mr. Hoover very unhappy over it. If enough farmers are starved out of business, production will decrease, the proportion of supply to demand will become smaller, and the surviving farmers will profit. But understandably enough that harsh remedy does not arouse enthusiasm in any agricultural bosoms.

Production might be limited if the farmers would "get together," as many publicists think they ought to. But agriculture is not a controlled industry, there is no machinery for making it so, and to say that the farmers ought to organize is merely equivalent to saying that there ought not to be any farm problem. Perhaps there ought not to be. But the fact remains that there is.

There are three possible ways of curbing the painful effect of the law of supply and demand on agriculture One is for the government to buy the surplus at a price profitable to the producer. That would take control of the market away from the buyer and give it to the government—which would use that control for the farmer's benefit. Another way would be to guarantee the exporter an American price on surpluses marketed abroad. There again the market level would be fixed by the government—instead of being the world market price, it would be the "American price," whatever the government decided that to be.

The third way proposed is to form a colossal government corporation, amply financed and capable of "cornering" commodity markets. Such a corporation would be in a position to bargain for good prices; but an essential feature of the plan would be that the cost of manipulation would be charged to the commodities benefitted by it.

In each of these schemes—the first of which is essentially the plan advocated by President Hoover—the government puts up the money. In the first plan, the government's money goes to agriculture in the form of an indirect subsidy. In the second, the government's loss consists in a decrease of custom's receipts. In the third, there would be no loss except the loss of interest on the investment—unless the plan went wrong. The third scheme has been ruled out.

It is an interesting situation, to say the least.

FARM FIRE LOSSES.

ALTHOUGH practically all of the fire losses that annually rob American farmers of $150,000,000 are preventable, the per capita losses seem to be increasing constantly. This is a very grave problem for farmers to face, especially as the per capita losses in the country as a whole are on a decline.

Unceasing care and vigilance are necessary, as well as knowledge of the causes of fire and its ever-present danger. South Dakota is among a number of states in which organizations are now giving serious thought to the problem of educating the farmer in the matter of farm prevention. Let us hope this work is extended throughout the country.

Statistics compiled by the National Board of Fire Underwriters indicate that lightning causes 18 per cent of the total destruction. Defective chimneys account for 12 per cent; sparks on roof, 7 per cent; matches and smoking, 6 per cent; spontaneous combustion, 4.69 per cent; petroleum and its products, 4 per cent; stoves and furnaces, 4 per cent. Other leading causes are open lights, electric wires, etc., which account for 32 per cent, and which, also, are largely preventable.

STRAW HAT DAY.

THE great day is at hand. It's off with the old, on with the new. Old hats must make way for the bright new straws that have been adorning the shop windows.

Somehow there is always something cheerful about putting on one's new straw hat for the first time.

Just watch the bright bands . . . the panamas and leghorns . . . why, Spring was never really here before these straw hats came.

The well-dressed man, nowadays, does not cling to his felt hat or derby. He gets his straw hat right at the outset of the straw hat season. He has come to see the attractiveness and many advantages of the straw hat.

It is lighter and brighter than other hats . . . a sensible hat to wear in warm weather. And the many models and styles of straw hats now available make it possible for every man to choose a hat suiting his personality.

The Pessimist (proposing): "Darling, I love you. Will you be my Widow?"

JEREMIAH'S CALL TO OBEDIENCE

Jeremiah 7:1-11, 21-23

REV. SAMUEL D. PRICE, D. D.

It is good for any discouraged person to spend time with Jeremiah. He had been given a mission. No matter how the people treated the messages that he was sent to deliver, he just came right back at them when least expected. Read the entire chapter and then keep right on through chapter ten; all forms the message which this man presented at this time. You will find that Jeremiah was ahead of his day in the use of parables and object lessons. People always pay more attention to an object or a story that relates to the subject matter under consideration.

Jeremiah was bold as an ambassador for he was not delivering his own message. In the opening verse today he makes it clear that he had a "word" to present from Jehovah. This should have been enough to make the people stop and listen. The place where the speaker took his stand is interesting. It was at the gate entering into the temple in Jerusalem. No longer were the people going therein to learn what they should do, that they might practise the truths in their lives. Now Jeremiah tries to make them think rightly about the temple as a place of worship and not regard it as a kind of a talisman which would be as a charm to enable them to go out and do just as they pleased.

"Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place." Yes. That is just what he had said before, but they had not paid any attention thereto, so they must be made to hear the same command again. With this summons there was a promise from Jehovah. If the people would only obey, they could continue in Jerusalem and Judea and not be carried away into captivity, as had been the case with the Northern Ten Tribes.

It may be that the people tried to drown out the voice of Jeremiah with their slogan "The temple of Jehovah," for the very walls had become a kind of fetisch. That is the way the people of Ephesus did when they cried for a length of time, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians" at the time of Paul's plain preaching of pertinent truth.

Jeremiah would also use repetition for the sake of emphasis. His word was "thoroughly" as he told them the extent to which they must give up their sins. These sins were named in part, and they have a social relationship. Wrong was being done to "his neighbor, the sojourner, the fatherless, and the widow." God is always concerned for the defenseless and He wants to make mankind love instead of hate one another. By means of varied kinds of communications this world is indeed a neighborhood, but it is far from being a brotherhood, such as our Jehovah desires.

Plainest language is used in giving a list of customary sins. They were named thieves, murderers, adulterers and makers of lies. There was only one way they could stop such things. It was not by offering more sacrifices. They were reminded of the loving command that had been given when they were being called out of Egyptian slavery. It was "Hearken unto my voice." The call of Jeremiah was none other than a renewal of this Voice from the Throne. It was about the last call that would be given, and yet it was not too late. Right now they must "Amend your ways thoroughly." A like urgent call, coupled with a blessed promise comes to every present day sinner. If and when we will meet the conditions, and they are reasonable, God will fully do His part in keeping the covenant.

Heart to Heart Talk

By John Joseph Haines, M.D.

LIFE A MYSTERY

Take the delightful uncertainty, the guess-work, the "gamble," if you'd call it that—take these elements out of life, and life loses interest.

The mystery of tomorrow—who would have it otherwise? The uncertainty of what may happen—how seductive! I would not know the future if I could; the hope that it be bright arouses all the faith of which I am capable; and life without faith is but dull, drab, mean existence.

Why, the few things we are reasonably sure of in the future are the very things that bring dread. We don't like to think about death, sorrowing mourners, and the like—so we turn hurriedly to dreams—to hopes of eternal life; and right there, the mystery holds a world of comforting assurances.

I certainly don't want to know exactly what will happen tomorrow, next week, next year; I might not sleep well tonight, or for nights to come. I prefer the amorous dream of golden possibility, that tempers me to combat possible disaster, like the loss of a small bet in life's great game of chance.

Good men and women have committed suicide to escape calamities which they felt sure would come. Ah, they were not sure. Nobody can be absolutely sure of the future, or what it may bring—and that's a mighty comforting fact, it seems to me, to tuck away in one's bosom especially if he has tendencies to see only the dark side of things.

I have no use for the "fortune-teller," or for any one who claims ability to peer into hidden realms and make forecasts for me. To accept life with its entrancing uncertainties, its inspiriting gambles, its happy conflicts—to win some of its ten thousand victories—to overcome evil with good—what better doctrine than that?

Boxing Instructor (after first lesson): "Now, have you any questions to ask?"

Beginner (in a daze): "Yes, how much is your correspondence course?"

Roberts: "Are you sure your new invention will work?"

Edwards: "No; I'm only sure I'll have to if it doesn't."

Just What You've Been Waiting For!

THE NEW RUMELY NO. 3 Hillside Combine

IF YOU are one of the many farmers who have expressed a desire for a small combine suited to the exacting conditions of hillside harvesting, you will find just what you have been waiting for in the new Rumely No. 3 Hillside Harvester.

It is an ideal machine for the farmer with a limited acreage to cut, and for farmers who do not wish to keep many horses. In every way it is equally as dependable as the big Rumely No. 1 Hillside Combine which has established such a splendid reputation for fine performance and all-around reliability.

The No. 3 Hillside comes to you fully equipped for all ordinary purposes, but special additional equipment is available if desired, such, for instance, as a 2-foot header extension for use in light crops, or a 30-bushel grain bin for use in territories where at times it is the practice to haul the grain away in wagons instead of sacking it.

Features That Mean Something

SUPERIORITY of design and new standards of mechanical excellence distinguish every phase of the construction of the new Rumely No. 3 Hillside Combine. Here are some of the features that appeal to practical combine operators:

1. ANTI-FRICTION BEARINGS—22 of them—like jewels in a watch, are found at every important point. The threshing cylinder, separator fan, recleaner fan, main beater and clutch are all mounted on high-grade ball bearings, while Timken Tapered Roller Bearings are found in all ground wheels. At other points Hyatt Roller Bearings are used. These bearings insure a light-running, easy-pulling machine. They eliminate all bearing troubles and save time, for the require but little attention from the operator.

2. HIGH-PRESSURE LUBRICATION is used throughout. Practically every bearing on the machine is lubricated in this modern and highly efficient manner. This system eliminates constant stopping for oiling. Furthermore, it provides effective and lasting lubrication, for each bearing is equipped with a small dust-proof fitting, into which the lubricant is forced under such high pressure that the old oil is pushed out and the fresh oil reaches every part of the bearing. Dust and moisture are kept out.

3. ROLLER-CHAIN DRIVES are an important feature on the No. 3 Hillside Combine and are used on all major drives. Their chief value lies in their simplicity and strength. This type of drive has the endorsement of all practical and experienced combine men because it makes for easier running, longer life and avoids the troubles prevalent with the old style malleable chains. Adjustable tighteners are provided wherever they can be used to advantage. This type of drive is practically trouble-proof.
