Official Paper for Morrow County.

JOIN THE FIRE COMPANY.

COUNCILMEN will undertake the organization of a fire fighting company in Heppner. This was decided at the Monday meeting. The city has gone along several years without any kind of an organized fire fighting force. It has, luckily, been without any big fires during the period.

The recollection of a short time back, in 1918, when several blocks of the city were wiped out by the arch destructor, should be enough to convince anyone that this is not a good policy. Every property owner in the city should be vitally interested in seeing that the new organization be made a success.

LEARN TO SWIM.

FREE swimming instruction will be given at the American Legion pool for a two months' period beginning with the opening of the tank. This is made possible by the cooperation of the Legion and the local chapter of the American Red Cross. It is a mighty fine move.

Swimming, aside from being one of the very best recreation sports, is often a safeguard of life. There are few people today who do not at some time go on, or in the water. And whenever they do they can never tell when the ability to swim may bring them safely to shore.

It is hard to teach an old dog new tricks, and it may be that very few grown-ups who have never learned to swim will be benefited by the instruction. This makes little difference. The children are the ones who will be greatly benefitted, and to them the older generation is obligated to see that they have the opportunity to learn to swim before they, too, become too old to learn new tricks.

The man who feels that he can not spare the time from his business to take a vacation is the one who needs it most. Unload the worries of your business for a couple of weeks, if for no more than to stay home and work in the yard.

Sunday School Lesson

International Sunday School Lesson for July 7 THE STORY OF EZEKIEL Ezekiel 3:4-11; 24:15-18

Three lessons are given to the book of Ezekiel and plans should be made now to read the 48 chapters within that time. Visions and symbols abound. Much will be found to stimulate thinking which cannot be explained. You will be lifted, as was the author, into realms of the spiritual and come to an ever greater conception of the reality of the Almighty.

Ezekiel had been carried to Babylon from Jerusalem in the deportation during the reign of Jehoiachin, in 597 B. C. Daniel was already there by a still earlier transfer of captivity. Keep in mind that the overthrow of Jerusalem was 586 B. C. Our author, prophet and pastor began his work at the age of 30, which was the usual time to enter the priestly office, and such his father Buzi held. The very day is indicated when his ministry began, and it translates into our June 26. The place is Tel-aviv, located on a canal in Babylonia. Indicated passages for special research are Ezekiel 1: 1-3; 2:1-3; 7:1-4; 8:1-4; 11:22-25; 24:15-24; 33:30-33.

Harvest will be under way by the middle of the month in the north end of the county. But harvest comes and goes nowadays without a very noticeable increase in activity. Such is the way of modern machinery.

Our compliments to Mitchell Thorn, local manager for the Pacific Power and Light company, who won the utilities' public speaking contest over the Northwest field at Seattle. Good work, "Mitch."

Summertime Heppner is becoming well established in the timber. There may be some who do not know that vacationland lies right at the city's door. They should see Morrow county first.

Study of Forestry Good For Young Folks' Clubs

Groups of young people can find interesting and profitable club work along many lines of forestry, says the Forest Service, Portland.

The forestry-club movement has extended to most parts of the country, and already a large number of boys and girls are enrolled. Organizations, such as the 4-H clubs, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Girl Reserves, Camp Fire Girls, Y. M. C. A., De Molay, and a number of schools, have included forestry in their program.

In the organization of a forestry club, a group of young people should have some adult organization to act as its sponsor, says the Forest Service. Provision for adequate leadership, and for real forest work in the woods if possible, should be made. Club activities suggested by the Forest Service include tree study, general forestry, study of forest products, study of woods and wood structure, game protection and propagation, recreation, forest protection, forest management, planting, and public education in forestry.

In Miscellaneous Publication 45-M, Forestry Clubs for Young People, just published by the United States Department of Agriculture, detailed suggestions of forestry activities for young peoples' clubs and ways and means of carrying them out are given. The bulletin also contains numerous suggestions as to sources of information for club leaders and young people engaged in forestry-club work. Copies of the publication may be obtained free of charge, while the supply lasts, by writing to the Office of Information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., or to the District Forester, Portland, Oregon.

The pageant will not only depict the growth of the Oregon country from prehistoric times, but will present a brilliant ballet in which the future that lies before the state will be shown in an elaborate and most unusual way. The early episode will show in turn the Indian in his native haunts before the coming of the white man, the migration to this region, the coming of Lewis and Clark, the settlement of early communities, on up to present day industry, showing the resources and industries of the state, such as forestry, agriculture, fishing, commerce, industry and power as they are expected to be in the future.

Losses of grain during the threshing operation, although difficult to detect and often dismissed by the grower as of little consequence, commonly range from one to five per cent, finds D. D. Hill of the farm crops department of the Oregon experiment station. Lack of careful adjustment of the different parts of the threshing machine is blamed for most of the losses.

In harvesting, losses from the binder method are much greater than where the combine is used, finds Professor Hill, after making a comparison of combined harvesters with threshers and binders as to their relative efficiency in harvesting grain. These losses are divided into loss from the binder itself, loss from handling the bundles and loss through the stationary threshing machine.

One place in the threshing machine which requires careful adjustment to avoid loss is that part of the machine which has to do with removing the grain from the head—the cylinder and concaves which performs its function by a combination of beating and rubbing process. Unless the adjustment here is uniform, some of the grain will go through unthreshed, while other grain will be badly crushed or cracked. The required number of concaves depends upon the grain being threshed.

The self-feeders of the stationary threshing machines are also often in need of adjustment. Here much depends also on having the bundles pitched onto the self-feeder heads first, and in keeping the stream of bundles uniform.

Other factors, such as keeping the machine level, having sufficient overloads without allowing the machinery, and having the grain dry and mature all tend to decrease losses and increase efficiency in the threshing operation.

Bulk handling of grain is now rapidly replacing the sack handling method in the northwest, reports the Oregon experiment station. The change from the old laborious sack handling method has been advocated for the last 25 or 30 years, but it is only during the last five years that general progress has been made.

Sam McDaniel was down from his mountain ranch near Harding on Monday and reports grass and feed good there now. The weather has turned much warmer up that way.

GOOD POLICY

Preaching is one thing; good business policy is another. Men find things to criticize in preaching; only a dumb-bell opposes the safe and sane business proposition. If you study your newspaper as you should, then take note of the great number who are overtaken in crime, folly, and other wrongdoing. Set the number down in your memorandum-book each day for a month. The number will astonish you—and the sad total will be a shouting, thundering argument for right living.

There is absolutely no excuse for doing wrong—for it is the poorest business policy in the world; why? because it leads inevitably to disaster.

Take intoxicating drink, for instance. Over-indulgence, or, for that matter, taking it under any circumstances save under advice of a good doctor for illness—is a very, very poor business policy. Why? Because its victims are legion.

Every man knows right from wrong by native intuition. Every man has been at the forks of the road. It has always paid to turn to the right. There is no better business.

The square shooter is the happy man; the crook does not know the meaning of happiness, because always apprehensive; he is never sure of being safe; his restlessness becomes self-torture in course of time. The best business policy in the world is—the Golden Rule.
