IS CANADA BETTER?

THERE is so much talk about the law-abiding people in Canada, and we hear so many people say: "They don't do things that way over in Canada. When laws are passed over in that country everybody knows that it means business and they are obeyed, if not, it means jail, and I don't mean maybe."

Probably some of that is true, or, at least it was before the days of the automobile. But according to best authorities now there is something in human nature unable to resist the exhiliration of speed, law or no law. Anyway, the Vanto enforce such trafficways in this city," says the Sun, "is a stiff police drive against the offenders."

This is the same kind of admonition that you find in most papers of the United States.—Willamette

At the same time, we are con-fronted by a statement by Alexan-der Legge, chairman of the Firm Board, that the shrinkage in stock calues has had a very deteriorating effect on the prices of wheat. This only goes to show that other indus-tries, because they are organized, and work cooperatively, are safer than the farm industry from the effects of a stock exchange slump. When the good work being done by the Farm Board and other agencies finds fruition in a thorough organization of the farm industry, farmers will have less to fear from irregu-larities in Wall Street.

FISH AND GAME 臺 ACTIVITIES 臺

Released by the Oregon State Game Jommission, Oregon Bldg., Portland

When the annual report for the year ending September 30, 1929, is completed it will undoubtedly show a much greater planting of fish than did the previous year. One reason for the increase is the fact that many of the small fish that couver Sun tells the whole world that "disregard for stop and slow signals was never so noticeable as it is in Vancouver today. The only swift running streams, and defend themselves against other fish. In the past year very many of the large plantings have been of trout run ning from five to nine inches in length. It is believed by Harold Clifford, state game warden and Matt Ryckman, superintendent of hatcheries that the holding of fish in the hatcheries until they reach a size of approximately six inches greatly lowers the mortality of the trout and this works to the decided advantage of the anglers.

An average number of arrests for violation of the game laws has been made during the past year, but the fines levied by justices of peace in glut and the prices were low.

This idea has interesting possibilities. It presages a time when the ruit business will be out of its opsy-turry state in which the sum-feuits all come out in the winder. Thus the state game commission will receive an increase in revenue from the fines. One half of the amount of each fine goes to the game department and the remainder to the county in which it ter and the winter fruits all come mainder to the county in which it
