

E. O. FLEECES HIGH AT PORTLAND SHOW

Pacific International Exhibits Said Best and Largest Ever.

A wool fleece exhibited by John E. Chamberlain, Mt. Vernon, Grant county, Oregon, won the silver trophy donated by the Oregon Wool Growers association for the best Oregon fleece from a manufacturer's standpoint in the wool show put on by the Pacific Cooperative Wool Growers at the Pacific International Livestock exposition in Portland, October 28 to November 2. The wool show is the third annual event that has been sponsored, as an educational project, by the Pacific Cooperative Wool Growers, the largest growers' cooperative wool marketing association in the United States. The trophy won by Mr. Chamberlain is a beautiful four-piece coffee set and was awarded for the first time this year.

Agnes M. Tudor of Rome, Malheur county, Oregon, exhibited the first prize winning Fine Staples fleece in the commercial division. Her entry was runner-up for championship honors which were won by an Ohio fleece. R. R. Roberts, Powell Butte, Oregon, was fourth in the same classification. C. W. Lewis of Klamath Falls won the championship trophy awarded by the Jacobs Oregon City Woolen Mills for the best Half Blood fleece in the show. W. J. Weese of Ontario won second for this grade. C. H. Wasson of Baker won second for Quarter Blood Combing wool.

"The show was harder to judge this year than ever and competition was keener in almost every class," said George T. Willingmyre, specialist in wool marketing and standardization for the United States department of agriculture who, together with Herbert Bentley of the Pacific Cooperative Wool Growers, judged the show for the third consecutive year. "Last year I said it was the best fleece wool show I had ever seen, and this year's exhibit is even better."

Two hundred fleeces were entered in the show. Fourteen silver trophies and prize money aggregating close to $350.00 were awarded the winners. The championship and first place fleeces will again be sent to the Chicago International Livestock exposition for the national competition. Last year two championships and a total of fifteen places were won by fleeces sent from the Pacific's show to Chicago.

An interesting feature of the wool show at Portland was an exhibition fleece weighing 62 pounds, shown by the Animal Husbandry department of the state college of Washington. It was a 54 months growth Rambouillet wether fleece obtained in connection with an experiment by the state college of Washington to determine the factors of feed, weather conditions, age, etc., that enter into the growth of wool.

Trophy winners for championship fleeces in the show were as follows: Henry Ranch Co., Ridgefield, Wash., Shropshire ram; Oeste Bros., Davis, Cal., Shropshire ewe; Frank Brown, Carlton, Ore., Hampshire ram; Eugene C. Tribble, Lodi, Calif., Romney ram; F. N. Bullard, Woodland, Calif., Rambouillet ram; W. H. Calland, Summerfield, Ohio, Delaine-

Merino ram; John E. Chamberlain, Mt. Vernon, Ore., best Oregon fleece from manufacturer's standpoint; W. H. Calland, Summerfield, Ohio, Fine wool fleece; C. W. Lewis, Klamath Falls, Ore., Half Blood; Ed. A. Kruse, Roseburg, Ore., Three-eighths blood; Carl Anderson, Opheim, Montana, Quarter blood; Eugene Tribble, Lodi, Calif., Low Quarter blood; J. B. Stump, Jr., Mouth, Ore., best Bradi fleece, and H. V. Link, Airlie, Oregon, mohair.
